This graphic demonstrates the optical spectrum one would see from glowing neon gas... neon shows a specific set of spectral lines. Note how each bright colored line in the color bar corresponds to an upward "spike" in the graphical format. Since most of the lines are in the yellow and red regions of the optical spectrum, a neon lamp appears "orange" to your eye. The presence of this pattern of lines in the spectrum of a glowing cloud in space would tell astronomers that the cloud contains neon in the gas. *1

The Inner Divine Nature

The Divine as Encompassed Dualities

As we are full of dualities, leading to non-wholeness and non-integration of attributes, the Divine is the integration, the wholeness: The Divine is all dualities encompassed. As such the Divine is the unmanifest. We are the manifest, with the potential to come closer and closer to that immense wholeness, without ever reaching it. But we have choice, and so we are free to choose whether we will fall asleep in the dualities and indulge their compulsive nature, or scrutinise them, transmute the pain and encompass them. These two divergent paths can be called evolutionary and devolutionary.

As wholeness, the Divine has been depicted in various religions. In Christianity one symbol of that wholeness is the tetragrammaton—a square, depicting for one thing the 4 elements of astrology and alchemy, giving rise to the unpronounceable name JHVH which are the acronyms sitting one at each corner. This gives rise to the name for the Divine of JeHoVaH. This name is simply a shorthand for the wholeness symbolised by the tetragrammaton. Wholeness can only be a merging of masculine and feminine attributes and principles, thus it seems appropriate to name the divine, as J.Todd Ferrier always states, the Father-Mother.

Symbols of wholeness come in several forms, emanating from dream imagery which occurs in anyone the world over. It could be the square, the circle, gold, a precious stone, a ring, the uroboros, our house with its many rooms and levels, the hermaphrodite (being the dual sexed being containing all encompassed polarities from both masculine and feminine). Practically in dreams, these symbols seem to depict our current attitude to the process of becoming whole, or encompassing a duality that we are currently involved in on the surface of our life. They depict how we are resisting the inner divinely guided process towards wholeness.

The Tibetan Mandala is a good depiction of the nature of duality. Half beast, half human beings are lined up at the bottom. Around the circle of wholeness are depictions of male-female couples having sex, joining their attributes (as far as the dream meaning of sex is concerned). At the top sit the saints, having encompassed what is below them. Edinger says of the mandala symbolism in The Mystery Lectures—A Journey Through C.G.Jung's Mystery Coniunctionis:

The first [inner] circle would represent the condition of initial unconscious unity that we start with when we are born. It's the state of unity which animals live their whole existence. Then, in the course of ego development, the gradual and conscious discrimination of the four functions [synonymous with the four elements] turns the initial circle of unconscious wholeness into a square.... Harmonizing and unifying can only be achieved by a further circling of the square. First the original circle must be squared and then the achieved square must be circled in order to achieve wholeness on a conscious level.

In the Western and Christian symbolism the mandala, the sacred circle, is in the Celtic Cross. When the corners of the tetragrammaton are joined across its square, it gives rise to the cross. So the Celtic Cross with its circle and cross combined is similar to the Eastern mandala in symbolic interpretation.

The Source of Elemental Potencies

In the alchemical framework there are many "operations" which can act upon our resistance patterns to help transmute them. The potencies behind these operations come from our inner divine nature—they are part of our fundamental makeup. These operations include the four elements. Fire purifies the desire nature gradually through burning us through to the essential inner desire (and as said previously, this fire is particularly noticeable in a discipline powerful enough to evoke it as an intense bodily sensation). The sublimation of air gradually enables a divine reasoning of things (reasoning from an understanding of the inner divine laws and the real cause of things). Water dissolves the hardened one-sided persona bringing in compassion for, and empathy with, our disowned parts. Lastly earth brings us for one thing the solidity, containment and limitation of our alchemical vessel (either willingly created or forced upon us in life), and for another the inner understanding—the solid rock of realisation from which we are sure of how to be and how to act and can proceed with commitment and patience.

These potencies are brought to us in life entrenched in resistance—when we are in their cross of matter they are turned outward only, so that any standard definition of them we might read depicts them only in this gross aspect. Only harnessing them for the process of transmutation can take us out of the square or cross of matter and into the circle of wholeness or encompassment of duality.

The Divine Nature as Guide

Not only does our deepest inner nature create our outer experiences to show us our one-sidedness, and provide the potencies from within us to transmute our way out of the resultant mess, but it also acts as the guide to use these potencies to do it. In alchemy this guide is "The Spirit Mercurius"—although really Mercurius is the totality of the divine in the process and cannot be pinned down to something, because it is the source of everything we need to become more conscious. Our more striking and profound dreams contains symbolic representations of our outer life and how we are dealing with it - or more to the point how we are not. Such dreams show us how we are misusing the inner elemental forces for one thing, and they speak in a rich symbolic alchemical language, ever trying to teach us our own process of transmutation—all the more avidly once we make attempts to understand the language.

In body electronics pointholding we only get what we need and not what we want. So many people come to pointholding expecting things to happen to them physically and emotionally, only to be met with disappointment when none of it happens as they yet again lie on a therapy table sound asleep or completely detached. From what I see of someone with a persistent attitude who still continues, everything we get coming to the surface is part of what we need to go deeper into our real problems of one-sidedness. Such things are deeply buried and unconscious, so making a conscious choice of what we need to work on is fruitless—it is always brought up to be right in front of us, we just have to spot it. Once we can put our expectations to one side we can accept that something far greater than us is guiding the content of the sessions and heading us towards a definite goal, even though we are likely to see every session initially as a being on a completely different topic.

Essentially all a facilitator is doing is reminding us how to harness the forces for the work of transmutation and acting as a co-guide into spotting what is just coming to the periphery of our awareness. We are at best only the real alchemist's assistant.

The Alchemical Mercurius [right]

A common symbolic figure to appear in an alchemical journey is Mercurius. It is essentially everything: the fountain as the source of all life and duality; the prima materia with which we are to work; the guide in the work; the source of the energies for that work and the resulting understanding, love and wisdom which lay beyond the dualities we have been clouded by all the time. Hard to pin down, the slippery mercurius is the nature of the Divine itself.

The Drama in the Universe Continues

“I could see that as love purifies us, it bares in us those areas most in need of growth. In this struggle with love, our emptiness and fear are unearthed and pain is released. As we see and accept ourselves in this process, and understand and respect the others, we become more aware of our wholeness.” —Rick and Louisa Clerici

Planet Earth was originally created to be a Garden of Eden. As many books on the subject may tell you, it is the most beautiful planet of its kind in the entire Universe. The reason for this is because it was originally planned not as a planet for habitation, but rather to be a hideaway lovenest for both Enjlou and Callia. It's intent was to be a getaway place from the varied pressures of Creation and the 'kids.' That is why it is so unique in the Universe, and indeed in all of Creation.

It might seem strange to us perhaps that 'God' takes a vacation, but remember 'as above, so it is below.' Rest points in eternity are important on every level of expression of Soul, whether it be the higher, more advanced ones, or those who are just beginning to enter into the cycle of cosmic learning. So it was for the Creator Parents as well. And what better place to rest than on a small blue and green orb stuck far way from everything, right out in the very corner of the Universe. Its peacefulness lay not just in its beauty as a dream place to vacation, but also in its privacy.

Other Universal Beings such as Ramtha, and here again, Schlemmer's Council of Nine, echo the same opinion of this planet's uniqueness:

“... your planet Earth is the most beautiful that exists in the Universe. It has a physical variety that no other planet has. ... It has aspects of all planets. It is like a composite of the Universe.”

In the Gnostic Scriptures we find a textual fragment entitled The Uniqueness of the World that also hints at this uniqueness. The ancient manuscript refers to an early church father named Basilides and describes his model of the universe in which there are 365 heavens, but only a single world. This model, interestingly enough, also suggests that the heavens he speaks of are concentrically arranged about the earth, much as we have described the dimensions of existence to be arranged around every living thing in Creation. The number of dimensions perceived depending on the shades of difference where one is willing to draw a line.

Scholar Bernard Layton agrees that the doctrine that the world is unique was a philosophical commonplace, accepted by Stoics as well as other early schools of Christian thought.

In truth the Earth was also designed as one enormous temple—a monument to the FATHER, built to harmonize with the universal galactic center, as are all planets, and as can and will be seen by the ruins evident on Mars and on other planets in other solar systems as we begin to branch out further into space. The temples built by the various religions, and worshipped in by so many millions of people each week, are simply smaller versions of the planetary temple. They are built along the same pattern or gridworks of that of the planet and indeed of the Universe itself. They are built, however, on a smaller scale and to a lesser degree of energy and of vibration. While the planet is the microcosm (again we get the series of nested Russian dolls, stepping up and down the energies of Creation from one level to another), the solar system steps up to the higher level of the galaxy, to a level of a nebulae, to a level of a smaller Universe and so on up the ladder until eventually we come to find that this Super Universe is a smaller scale model of the Grand Central Universe of the original Creator ITSELF. Control of the temples, and of the temple aspect of the planet is a key element in controlling the people on the planet as we shall find when dealing with the history, control mechanisms, and future plans of the coming New World Order.

Ruth Norman, in her History of the Universe Volume I, describes this exact concept only in the very exact reverse order:

“And so we go down into the lower octaves of the various planetary structures within these whirling galaxies which, in a harmonious way, constantly receive and send the pulse beats of the Infinite Mind so synchronously that there is a constant relaying of great intelligence throughout the fiber that makes up these great island continents. Because of the great mechanics involved in this manner, the Spiritual brotherhood of Unarius is so organized that it works in and within this great organism, to be effective in a most helpful manner, down into the lowest of the chromatic structures of the universe.”

Michael Lawrence Morton, a planetary grid researcher cannot help but express the wonder of the exactness that he finds in the complex construction of the Earth's energetic:

“And every Grid Point has a Grid Latitude and a Grid Longitude, and every Grid Latitude and Grid Longitude has a precise number of arc-degrees, arc-minutes, and 'fractional' arc-seconds ... that's FRACTIONAL numbers of arc-seconds...so that we are talking about an AMAZINGLY specific and precise SET of correlations, here. Do you understand the 'magnitude' of the significance of this?”

The intricacy involved with Creation shall be taken up at various points throughout the book to save from stretching the limits of the reader's mind all in one go. To find out that the Creation story itself has been known since the advent of life here on this planet, may not, however, be such a stretch for the individual imagination. Hidden away in the language of myth and metaphor in numerous Creation stories from around the world have always been the thinly veiled references to these very same archetypal Creators.

One such reference is to be found at the beginning of the enuma elish, the Babylonian creation epic:

“When on high the heaven had not yet been named,
Firm ground below had not been called by a name,
Nought but primordial Apsu, their begetter,
And Mummu, and Tiamat—she who bore them all,
Their waters mingled as a single body.”

Here, Apsu (the male) represents the Creator Father, Enjiou; Mummu, also male, represents ARTOLA, the son; and Tiamat, the female, she who bore them all, represents the Creator Mother, Callia. The division into the male and female aspects necessary to create, can also be seen in the division present in the two hemispheres of the brain. Here we have both a masculine and a feminine side, but it is the combination of the two sides that will allow an individual being to fulfill the old adage that it takes both a mind and a heart to ascend into Heaven.

“I can feel this process happening as thought and thought and thought. This idea created itself into a series of processes and beings who defined, limited and controlled matter. This universe of processes and experiences was not made by the universal COSMIC CREATOR: this world with a beginning and an end was created by a lesser urge, the demi-urge, which expressed itself as “the gods.” On Earth, we have experienced this creation as the Luciferian rebellion, the Orion Agenda, the communion with the cycle of the gods who came down which is now coming to a close. Before the creation of the third dimension—a universe brought into existence so that we could consciously learn how to be in a holy state, zero, the numinous—before matter, time, and form, there was only the infinity of God and the Void (the feminine principle). Once consciousness or thought occurred, the Void was threatened by the possibility that nothingness had no existence. The Void felt the desire to define nothingness! Once this process of separation began—a duality into self and other—a whole series of experiences was initiated in order to manifest existence. At this point—the Alpha—the Creator withdrew its name, for the opposite of definition is naming—unifying. Listen to me very carefully now for the scientists on Earth are trying to steal the creator's name by calling the first laser for Star Wars, Alpha.

“Definition is the original confusion which has been reverberating down through time on this planet. The only thing that counteracts this process is naming the self by exploring one's own creativity. Our link to the galaxy is through art, beauty and love, which frees us from materialism—the addiction to things we are conditioned to believe we need. Creativity, or moving into experience with the Creator, is more powerful than any force, even materialism. We only create if we trust the process and let go of control. There must be no judgement about results or about reasons for creating in the first place. Any judgement instantly catalyzes the numinous into form. If healers stop to ask why they heal, artists why they art, lovers why they love, then experience falls back into definition, which blocks God's delight! Just by asking a question about existence, one is open to the negative path.”

We pick up the Creation story again with the time of Callia's forced exile by Enjiou into the Void, for it was out here in the Void that She became lost for a long and lonely time surrounded as it were by complete and utter darkness. This was truly a terrifying time for the Creator Mother. Imagine how fearful utter Darkness can be for a Grand Being created solely of Light. If the LIGHT of the FATHER is LOVE, then Callia was not only alone and afraid while she was out there, but She was also without LOVE.

More of the Mother's own Story of original Imprinting

“I have to tell this story using consciousness' words, even though words can only convey an impression of what it was really like there. The advantage of this is not only that it makes it possible for there to be communication in this way, but also that it makes it possible for interpretations made from these ancient imprints to be given so that they can be noticed for what they are; interpretations of original imprints. Mind thought these interpretations were fact and did not question them in many cases.

“... I had only feelings moving Me without knowing they were moving me or even that I felt them. I did not know where I was, or if there were any other place to be other than this. I knew nothing, only emptiness; great emptiness, which impressed me with the feeling that the void was large. My own lack of presence there and vague feeling of dislike blurred into hopelessness and a feeling of needing help. I must have gone blank again for a long time.

“Suddenly, I felt something there. It felt good. I did not know it could happen. I startled, but I was also overjoyed. Whatever this was apparently thought My startle meant I didn't like it, because it moved away.

“It hated Me and had no sympathy for me. I knew that. I did not like it, either, and wished it would go away.

“It did leave, and I really felt abandoned then. I hadn't liked it, but at least it had light, I now realized. I sank into an even deeper dark nothing.

“Nothing happened for a long time, until I finally saw or sensed the presence of light again. I awoke, as if startled awake from a long nightmare of grieving. I wanted to move toward the light. I was excited, expectant and hopeful. I yearned for it and tried to reach for it as much as I possibly could, hoping I would not frighten it this time. Propelled by fear and desire to try to have Him again, I somehow touched into this light. I was shocked and not received the way I had hoped I would be.

“... I laughed at Myself many times there when They made fun of Me. How They must have hated Me when I laughed as though I saw Myself as They saw me and did not know what They were really laughing about. As much as He pretended to love me and that all the anti-female jokes were only humor, the hatred showed when He had sex with Me. It was brutal, hard and mean, and then He left Me, pregnant. He did not care how I felt about it, and for so long I did not know I had the wrong him there. Rage was all he was, denied rage, in fact. When the split came and rage was denied, he never let me know it, and he never let me know that he was not all there was.”

Gnosticism tries to define these differences between Creation and the Void by drawing the boundary between the divine and the created orders in terms of their location in space. To a Gnostic, the darkness has not yet been dispelled, but eternally envelops the inferior realms of being, the layers of flesh and matter. The “moments” of creation do not represent points of transition from the “old” world to the “new,” but rather signify grades of spiritual perfection— islands in an ocean of darkness which is the Void. Theologically, these degrees of perfection are pictured as emanations as in varying degrees of light emanating from a source—the mysterious High God, the hierarchy of elements in the universe according to their distance from, and reflection of, that transcendent source of life. The principal emanations are what the ancient Gnostics called aeons (literally “ages” or “eternities”). These aeons are deified as entities in space, as the chief features of the great cosmic map for which events in time are only pale and illusory likenesses.

This interchanging of temporal categories into larger spatial metaphors is seen in the following passage from the hermetic literature:

“Of Aeons, Powers, Intelligences, Gods, Angels, Spirits delegate, Existing Non-existences, generated Ingenerables . . . years, Months, Days, Hours, —of [the] Boundless Point, from which the most minute begins to increase by parts.”

In her near-hopeless efforts to find Her way back to Creation, Callia was first able to find Her way to a temporary shelter here on Earth. And it was for eons of time that She was simply abandoned here, ‘marooned’ if you will. She was here all alone, in great pain—so great a pain that She almost died, starved of the very essence of Her Being, the Light she needed to exist. She was in fact so weak that She could barely rise to lift Herself off the planet and make Her way home.

Can a spiritual essence die? No. But it can be so starved or drained of its natural Light as to where what should be a roaring flame of Light, is hardly more than a flicker, a spark, a pilot light, barely holding on to its existence.

To appreciate the division that caused this whole event, we must take a look at what was going on inside Enjliou right before this happened. Here, Enjliou explains His feelings leading up to the time when Callia was cast off from Himself and wandered into the Void. Again, this is from Ceanne DeRohan:

“... Her fear was relieved when I appeared not to notice her, but this did not satisfy Her because She had a desire to be accepted exactly as She was and loved.

“... I had no way of knowing, without having My Will go outside of Me, what it was like to be without light or love present. I had to push My Will outside of me and have her feel what it was like to be Lost Will in space.

"I had to push My Will outside of Me on a wave of hate; otherwise there would have been some light and love present to sustain Her, and She would not have had the experience We needed. I did not know how this would feel to Her, and when I did feel it, the feeling was so terrible, I had to disconnect from Her. She had to receive this denial in order to have the experience We needed, and in the passionate fury I had worked Myself into it order to hate Her, I thought I did not care what She had to experience.

"... I did not know that to Her, loving Her meant accepting her as She was and helping Her to go through Her fear first. I thought I had not had time for Her fear. I thought We would never move if Her fear were allowed to get the upper hand.

"She was already holding back out of fear anyway, so I finally got the impression from her that I needed to help Her with Her fear. How? Most of the time I felt like I didn't have fear, only anger at Her for having fear. Whenever I allowed My anger, Her fear seemed to worsen.

"... I have guilt now that I had so little faith in Myself, but then I had all the feelings that humans have now about getting to have a mate and a relationship and no longer having to be alone. I had great desire not to make a mess of it anymore, and I gave this desire the place of uppermost importance with Myself. In advance of experiencing the Will in Her now emerged state, I judged everything I had thought to be a problem now. I judged all of that behaviour to be unloving and literally shoved it aside.

"When I had done this, I looked toward the Will in expectation of having Her love Me for it. I found beside Me a huge golden light that encircled Me in Her arms and I took this as a sign, although I later found it was not a sign, for the Will had no love of My denials. At that time, I had desire to overlook this and She did also because We had had such a long and difficult time achieving enough balance that the Will even could emerge. We wanted to go on now, and We feared that looking at any problems might put Us right back where we had been."

Abusive relationships did not begin here on planet Earth, nor on any other planet for that matter. Instead, it is only an archetype handed down to us from the higher worlds, from Parents who manifested us into this world, burdening us with their own Lost Will and in turn creating on this plane of existence—the most formidable, the most difficult, and also the most challenging learning experience of all.

Spirit and the Endless Void

There are two directions in Creation, one centrifugal, or out-flowing, the other centripetal or inward-flowing. Some religions call this 'the Breath of God', the exhaling and inhaling of Creation. The Light which the FATHER is, travels outward to the very corners of the created Universe carrying with it the manifestation of all that is, including the individual essences of Soul to be manifested in order to gain experience. This Light then returns to the FATHER bringing with it the harvest of those 'individual atoms of God' that have chosen, and have earned the right, to go on to a higher level of Creation.

The Council of Nine express this idea while referring to the rebuilding of the planet after a major disaster such as the Great Flood:

"It became necessary then to populate Planet Earth, so that the cells of the Creator could become individuals and free souls, in order for them to become one in unity and harmony by choice."

Choice and Intent are everything in Creation.

This Breath of God travels in a spiral direction down through the various levels of Creation or Heaven until it reaches the very lowest rung of the ladder. It is from the very spiral nature of this energy that the word which describes it is formed—'Spirit.' As it manifests into the worlds of the physical plane it appears to be a vortex, and this is the name often applied to the portals of the planet through which the energy comes. These vortexes or portals create 'windows' into and out of the planet for the energy to continue circulating, much as a bedroom window allows the free circulation of air into a home. The chakra system of energy that supports the human body is a microcosm of this form, masculine energy flowing in a clockwise or downwardly 'creative' direction. Female energy travelling conversely in a counter-clockwise or upwardly 'destructive' direction.

Every living thing, the planet, the continents and even particular regions of the planet as well, all have their corresponding chakra system that allows for the ebb and flow of this Universal energy. The battle to control the access to these energy centers is also a key issue in the current battle raging for control of this planet, and indeed for the entire Universe.

As this neutral creative energy known as Spirit reaches the lowest levels or farthest outposts of Creation, it then reverses direction to begin its upward spiral back into the very heart of Creation Itself. This is the Light of the FATHER carried on the Sound Current also known as 'the Audible Life Stream of God.' It is the energy that supports all of Creation, a neutral force which can be used to create or manifest at any level of existence. Being a neutral force, it can be used for positive purposes or their antithesis. It is the key to understanding the Ancient Mysteries from which the New World Order sprang, and also the key to understanding the coming ascension of planet Earth back up the spiral of Creation into a higher dimension of Being.

Time exists as function of Space and of this movement of energy through the various spheres. All things however, have their allotted period of time, and this brings to us all the Great Cycles of Time talked about in so many religious texts. The end of the Mayan calendar is the end of one such major cycle of Time. It is this Breath of God that supports all things and also brings all things to their ultimate and final conclusion through the various cycles of Creation. The Hindu's express this idea in the twin aspects of God known as Shiva, the procreative force which is also the destroyer as well. Shiva's consort, coincidentally, is the mother goddess Uma, or Kali (so very similar to Her true name, Callia).

In many Eastern religions Creation is the positive or masculine aspect of God, and the Void into which things are created is the negative or feminine aspect. The creative aspect of Shiva is often represented by the lingam or male organ that fills the space of the yoni, or female sexual organ. This reflects the true nature of the feminine as that which opens or makes way for Creation to occur. It is NOT however, the feminine creative principle in and of itself.

As the Council of Nine put it:

"... the female power is rooted in knowingness, instinct-intuition, and in a deeply physical engagement with the life-process. The female (and the feminine side within men) does not need intellectual explanation to know what is right or proper. Feminine power is the power to work in tune with the rhythms of Nature (to work with the Creator instead of in competition with HIM). The feminine way is to utilize the available energy and channel it sensitively in the most appropriate manner and direction. The male way is to create new energy and shove it where he wants."

Modern astrophysicists admit that to them there are a lot of things out there which they have no idea what they are made of, what fills space or the Void is one of them.

Fritjof Capra attempted to answer this enigma, and to bring together the science and religion in his book, The Tao of Physics. Hereto he grapples with explaining what both science and religion believe about the Void:

“The field theories of modern physics force us to abandon the classical distinction between material particles and the void. Einstein’s field theory of gravity and quantum field theory both show that particles cannot be separated from the space surrounding them. On the one hand, they determine the structure of that space, while on the other hand they cannot be regarded as isolated entities, but have to be seen as condensations of a continuous field which is present throughout space. . .

“The field exists always and everywhere; it can never be removed. It is the carrier of all material phenomena. It is the “void” out of which the proton creates the pi-mesons. Being and fading of particles are merely forms of motion of the field.

“The distinction between matter and empty space finally had to be abandoned when it became evident that virtual particles can come into being spontaneously out of the void, and vanish again into the void (dimensionality), without any nucleon or other strongly interacting particle being present.”

Capra then gives a diagram of such a process using the familiar coupling of male and female, positive and negative, as well as the third force which binds them together. He then continues:

“The vacuum is far from empty. On the contrary, it contains an unlimited number of particles which come into being and vanish without end.

“Here then, is the closest parallel to the Void of eastern mysticism in modern physics. Like the eastern Void, the “physical vacuum”—as it is called in field theory—is not a state of mere nothingness, but contains the potentiality for all forms of the particle world. These forms, in turn, are not independent physical entities, but merely transient manifestations of the underlying Void. As the sutra says, “Form is emptiness, and emptiness is indeed form.”

“The relation between the virtual particles and the vacuum is an essentially dynamic relation; the vacuum is truly “a living Void”, pulsating in endless rhythms of creation and destruction. The discovery of the dynamic quality of the vacuum is seen by many physicists as one of the most important findings of modern physics. From its role as an empty container of the physical phenomena, the void has emerged as a dynamic quantity of utmost importance. The results of modern physics thus seems to confirm the words of the Chinese sage Chang Tsai:

“When one knows that the Great Void is full of ch’i, one realizes that there is no such thing as nothingness.”

In his series of books on the ancient continent of Mu, James Churchward relates the findings of the ancients on exactly this same topic:

“While it is not generally appreciated to be so, the fact remains that our atmosphere is very highly specialized. It is only during recent years, since the advent of radio, that the essence in which the popular atmosphere floats has been recognized as a playing a most important part in the earth’s welfare; and, further, it is not yet appreciated that the essence in which the atmosphere floats is an essence totally different to that which fills space. The essence in which the atmospheric particles float is under direct control of the central magnet, while that which fills space is in no way affected by the central magnet, as the magnet has no power over it whatever.

“... Our scientists assume that that which fills space, and that in which our popular atmosphere floats, is one and the same thing. It is not, as shown in the sacred inspired writings of the Motherland.

“The ancients called that in which our atmosphere floats “the essence” and that which fills space they called “the water.” In the ancient writings it is repeatedly pointed out that the light force is carried in the essence, and not in the particles of our popular atmosphere.

“In the ancient writings, the symbol for that which fills space was a series of fine horizontal lines which they wrote “water.” The earthly water symbol was a serpent in motion, like the swells of an ocean, generally written as a series of wavy horizontal lines.

“... I think the symbol answers the question. The translators of the sacred writings could find no name corresponding with the original, to give to the plain horizontal lines, but the horizontal wavy lines were well known to them, so they differentiated between the two by calling one the “water” and the other “the waters.” I have never found a word giving the name used by the ancients, only the symbol; but their writings distinctly tell us that it is that which fills space. Not once but dozens of times.

“In many of the vignettes of the sacred inspired writings is unquestionably shown what the fine straight horizontal lines symbolize. As an instance, when the Creator is spoken of as having existed in space, a vignette accompanying the writing shows the seven-headed serpent moving along through fine horizontal straight lines within a circle.”

For the Hindus, that energy or Spirit which fills all space is a vital force known as “prana.” They have five different manifestations depending on the space in which it exists and its purpose. Still, in essence, it is that same energy of the FATHER which supports all things in Creation.

As a person works through their first experience of the true Creation story, they might be inclined to wonder why this was ever allowed to continue. To understand that point one must first consider two of Creation’s primary characteristics: one is sometimes called ‘the prime directive’—that each part of Creation must have its own Free Will. The second is the fact that the FATHER experiences HIS own Creation through that which has been created. Every new experience that no one has ever had before adds to the body of God’s experience, and to the body of knowledge of all that is created.

In Enjliou and Callia’s difficulties new expressions of Creation were being learned. It is the same here on Earth right now where so much new learning is taking place from experiences and ways of viewing certain experiences that have never been known before.

The Spiritual Hierarchy will not let Us destroy ourselves as some planets have been destroyed before during similar learning experiences such as this one, but we shall cover this in more detail as our journey draws to an end.

The fundamental belief about the universe in Gnosticism was that it contained the two cardinal spirits of Light and darkness. ‘Light’ represented truth and righteousness, and ‘Darkness’ depicted perversion and evil. The balance of one against the other in the cosmos was settled by celestial movement, and people were individually apportioned with degrees of each spirit as defined by their planetary circumstances of birth. The cosmic battle between light and darkness was thus perpetuated within humankind and between one person and another; some contained proportionally more light, others proportionally more dark. By tradition, the Spirit of Darkness was identified with Belial, meaning 'worthless,' whose children worshipped other gods rather than Jehovah.

The Alexandrian Gnostics taught that the first father, Yaldaboath, equivalent to our Enjliou, was bought forth from the depths by the Holy Spirit, who was called Sophia, meaning 'wisdom,' the Gnostic equivalent of Callia. The Holy spirit of Sophia was said to have 'moved on the face of the waters.'

The Continuation of Creation

Although ideally it takes the negative, female, Mother energy and the positive, male, Father energy of one of the other Creator Beings to create, it is possible for two 'male' or 'female' essences to also create or manifest beings here in the Universe as well. Lucifer and Enjliou were able to create together. ARTOLA and Callia were able to create together. Callia and Lucifer were able to create together, to bring forth manifestations of the Light. And each Being at this level was also able to create on Their own. These alternative methods of Creation, however, bring about problems with the individual spirits or Beings that have been manifested.

To correctly create or manifest a Soul in its full compliment or glory of the FATHER'S LIGHT takes a male and female energy, combined with the neutral force of the FATHER's Holy Spirit. What Enjliou and Callia manifested together, for the most part, were full-complement Light Beings. What ARTOLA and Callia were able to manifest together, for the most part, were also full-complement LIGHT BEINGS. In both these situations, however, those who were manifested were still imprinted with the negative aspects now also inherent in their Parent Creators. Again, "the sins of the father ..."

What Lucifer created, on his own, and with Callia, were beings that had insufficient Light to be able to properly deal with the higher levels of existence. They were and still are, beings who are unable to make their way home to the FATHER on their own. They comprise many of the sick and the needy of the planet, those beings who are unable to lift themselves above the rudimentary levels of survival. Other beings created during the most intense period of chaos in the creation of this universe, are what is called 'fragments' or even 'disembodied spirits.' The are "souls" who are not able to be fully manifested in their right form or structure. Lucifer created some of these, Callia created some of these, and so too did Enjliou. It is not the fault of those who were created that they are lacking or somehow incomplete. Then again, it is not the responsibility of all the other individual expressions of soul to help them heal either. These Souls must eventually be returned to the FATHER for correcting the level of LIGHT in their being, unless the Creator Parents can once again be heal Themselves, and in turn heal Their children.

The original beings who were emitted in the first acts of Creation in the Universe came "like massive groups in space"—what the Gnostic would called 'waves of emanation.' In these original groups there were greater and lesser degrees of spirits, each with their own designations and tasks to perform. Some of these were of course the Great Arc Angels, the lesser Arc Angels, the rainbow spirits, and the Ronalokas. Ceanne DeRohan goes into much more depth on these further creations in her series of books, than we have time to do here.

Each one of these subsequent group of Spirits manifested, from Lucifer on down, was basically flawed by the dissension which split the creative powers of the Universal Parents sending them off on their own adventures and agendas. Here, once again, we have the archetype of divorce and the 'traumatized' child who is a product of such an unbalanced upbringing. If you now have the feeling that you are not just living your own life, but that also of your parents in one form or another, you will understand the effect this Creation had on all of us who were created.

During Her time of isolation out in the Void, Callia came close to extinction of Her personal Light more than once before She was finally able to lift herself off the planet and find her way back to Enjliou. From there, She was eventually retrieved by Beings from the Central Universe and taken back for a healing. And, finally, after much time and recuperation from her near extinction, She and Enjliou were once again reunited, and the work of Creation continued.

Machiavellian theory teaches that the best way to win either a war is to 'divide and conquer' your opponent. In this way their forces are split, as well as the energies of their focus. That is exactly what Lucifer did with his Creator Parents. Pitting one Parent against the other, he deepened the rifts and divisions that already existed between them. Those who follow him also use exactly the same processes, as we shall see.

Lucifer's ultimate goal, however, as mentioned in many religious texts that deal with the Luciferian rebellion, was to usurp the role of His Father. Not just to be like God, but to actually be God, God of His own Universe in Creation—this one, Nebadon. ^{*3}

Cultural Collapse Progression

1. Removal of religious narrative

Religion has been a powerful restraint for millennia in preventing humans from pursuing their base desires and narcissistic tendencies so that they satisfy a god. Family formation is the central unit of most religions, possibly because children increase membership at zero marginal cost to the church (i.e. they don't need to be recruited).

Religion may promote scientific ignorance, but it facilitates reproduction by giving people a narrative that places family near the center of their existence. After the Enlightenment, the rapid advance of science and its logical but nihilistic explanations into the universe have removed the religious narrative and replaced it with an empty narrative of scientific progress, knowledge, and technology, which act as a restraint and hindrance to family formation, allowing people to pursue individual goals of wealth accumulation or hedonistic pleasure seeking. As of now, there has not been a single non-religious population that has been able to reproduce above the death rate.

Even though many people today claim to believe in god, they may not step inside a church but once or twice a year for special holidays. Religion went from being a lifestyle, a manual for living, to something that is thought about in passing.

2. Elimination of traditional sex roles

Once religion no longer plays a role in people's lives, the stage is set to fracture male-female bonding. It is collectively attacked by several ideologies stemming from the beliefs of Cultural Marxist theory, which serve to accomplish one common end: destruction of the family unit so that citizens are dependent on the state. They achieve this goal through the marginalization of men and their role in society under the banner of "equality." With feminism pushed to the forefront of this umbrella movement, the drive for equality ends up being a power grab by women. This attack is performed on a range of fronts:

- medicating boys from a young age with ADHD drugs to eradicate displays of masculinity
- shaming of men for having direct sexual interest in attractive and fertile women
- criminalization of normal male behavior by redefining some instances of consensual sex as rape
- imprisonment of unemployed fathers for non-payment of child support, rendering them destitute and unable to be a part of their children's lives
- taxation of men at higher rates for redistribution to women
- promotion of single mother and homosexual lifestyles over that of the nuclear family

The end result is that men, confused about their identity and averse to state punishment from sexual harassment, "date rape," and divorce proceedings, make a rational decision to wait on the sidelines. Women, still not happy with the increased power given to them, continue their assault on men by instructing them to "man up" into what has become an unfair deal—marriage. The elevation of women above men is allowed by corporations, which adopt "girl power" marketing to expand their consumer base and increase profits. Governments also allow it because it increases their tax revenue. Because there is money to be made with women working and becoming consumers, there is no effort by the elite to halt this development.

3. Women begin to place career above family

At the same time men are emasculated as mere “sperm donors,” women are encouraged to adopt the career goals, mannerisms, and competitive lifestyles of men, inevitably causing them to delay marriage, often into an age where they can no longer find suitable husbands who have more resources than themselves. The average woman will find it exceedingly difficult to balance career and family, and since she has no concern of getting “fired” from her family, who she may see as a hindrance to her career goals, she will devote an increasing proportion of time into her job.

Female income, in aggregate, will soon match or exceed that of men. A key reason that women historically got married was to be economically provided for, but this reason will no longer persist and women will feel less pressure or motivation to marry. The burgeoning spinster population will simply be a money-making opportunity for corporations to market to an increasing population of lonely women. Cat and small dog sales will rise.

Women succumb to their primal sexual and materialistic urges to live the “Sex and the City” lifestyle full of fine dining, casual sex, technological bliss, and general gluttony without learning traditional household skills or feminine qualities that would make them attractive wives. Men adapt to careerist women in a rational way by doing the following:

- to sate their natural sexual desires, men allow their income to lower since economic stability no longer provides a draw to women in their prime
- they mimic “alpha male” social behavior to get laid with women who, without having an urgent need for a man’s monetary resources to survive, can choose men based on confidence, aesthetics, and general entertainment value
- they withdraw into a world of video games and the internet, satisfying their own base desires for play and simulated hunting

Careerist women who decide to marry will do so in a hurried rush around 30 because they fear growing old alone, but since they are well past their fertility peak, they may find it difficult to reproduce. In the event of successful reproduction at such a later age, fewer children can be born before biological infertility, limiting family size compared to the historical past.

4. Birth rates decrease among native population

The stage is now set for the death rate to outstrip the birth rate. This creates a demographic cliff where there is a growing population of non-working elderly relative to able-bodied younger workers. Two problems result:

- Not enough tax revenue is supplied by the working population in order to provide for the elderly’s medical and social retirement needs. Borrowing can only temporarily maintain these entitlements.
- Decrease of economic activity since more people are dying than buying.

No modern nation has figured out how to substantially raise birth rates among native populations. The most successful effort has been done in France, but that has still kept the birth rate among French-born women just under the replacement rate (2.08 vs 2.1). The easiest and fastest way to solve this double-edged problem is to promote mass immigration of non-elderly individuals who will work, spend, and procreate at rates greater than natives.

A replenishing supply of births are necessary to create taxpayers, workers, entrepreneurs, and consumers in order to maintain the nation's economic development. While many claim that the planet is suffering from "overpopulation," an economic collapse is inevitable for those countries who do not increase their population at steady rates.

5. Large influx of immigration

An aging population without youthful refilling will cause a scarcity of labor, increasing that labor's price. Corporate elites will now lobby governments for immigration reform to relieve this upward pressure on wages. At the same time, the modern mantra of sustained GDP growth puts pressure on politicians for dissemination of favorable economic growth data to aid in their re-elections. The simplest way to increase GDP without innovation or development of industry is to expand the population. Both corporate and political elites now have their goals in alignment where the easiest solution becomes immigration.

While politicians hem and haw about designing permanent immigration policies, immigrants continue to settle within the nation. The national birth rate problem is essentially solved overnight, as it's much easier to drain third-world nations of its starry-eyed population with enticements of living in the first-world than it is to encourage the native women to reproduce. (Lateral immigration from one first-world nation to another is so relatively insignificant that the niche term 'expatriation' has been developed to describe it). Native women will show a stubborn resistance at any suggestion they should create families, much preferring a relatively responsibility-free lifestyle of sexual variety, casual internet dating via mobile apps, consumer excess, and comfortable high-paying jobs in air conditioned offices.

Immigrants will almost always come from societies that are more religious and, in the case of Islam with regard to European immigration, far more scientifically primitive and rigid in its customs.

6. Sanitization of host culture coincides with increase in immigrant power

While many adult immigrants will feel gracious at the opportunity to live in a more prosperous nation, others will soon feel resentment that they are forced to work menial jobs in a country that is far more expensive than their own. The majority of them remain in lower economic classes, living in poor "immigrant communities" where they can speak their own language, find their own homeland foods, and follow their own customs or religion.

Instead of breaking out of their foreigner communities, immigrants seek to expand it by organizing. They form local groups and civic organizations to teach natives better ways to understand and serve immigrant populations. They will be eager to publicize cases where immigrants have been insulted by insensitive natives or treated unfairly by police authorities in the case of petty crime. School curriculums may be changed to promote diversity or multiculturalism, at great expense to the native culture. Concessions will be made not to offend immigrants. A continual stream of outrages will be found and this will feed the power of the organizations and create a state within a state where native elites become fearful of applying laws to immigrants.

7. Destruction of native culture

This step has not yet happened in any first-world nation, so I will predict it based on logically extending known events I have already described.

Local elites will give lip service to immigrant groups for votes but will be slow to give them real state or economic power. Citizenship rules may even be tightened to prevent immigrants from being elected. The elites will be mostly insulated from the cultural crises in their isolated communities, private schools, and social clubs, where they can continue to incubate their own sub-culture without outside influence. At the same time, they will make speeches and enact policies to force native citizens to accept multiculturalism and blind immigration. Anti-hate and anti-discrimination laws will be more vigorously enforced than other more serious crimes. Police will monitor social networking to identify those who make statements against protected classes.

Cultural decline begins in earnest when the natives feel shame or guilt for who they are, their history, their way of life, and where their ancestors came from. They will let immigrant groups criticize their customs without protest, or they simply embrace immigrant customs instead with religious conversion and interethnic marriages. Nationalistic pride will be condemned as a “far-right” phenomenon and popular nationalistic politicians will be compared to Hitler. Natives learn the art of self-censorship, limiting the range of their speech and expressions, and soon only the elderly can speak the truths of the cultural decline while a younger multiculturalist within earshot attributes such frankness to senility or racist nostalgia.

With the already entrenched environment of political correctness (see stage 2), the local culture becomes a sort of “world” culture that can be declared tolerant and progressive as long as there is a lack of criticism against immigrants, multiculturalism, and their combined influence. All cultural identity will eventually be lost, and to be “American” or “British,” for example, will no longer have modern meaning from a sociological perspective. Native traditions will be eradicated and a cultural mixing will take place where citizens from one world nation will be nearly identical in behavior, thought, and consumer tastes to citizens of another. Once a collapse occurs, it cannot be reversed. The nation’s cultural heritage will be forever lost...

Russia

This is an interesting case because, up to recently, we saw very low birth rates not due to progressive ideals but from a rough transition to capitalism in the 1990’s and a high male mortality from alcoholism. To help sustain its population, Russia is readily accepting immigrants from Central Asian regions, treating them like second-class citizens and refusing to make any accommodations away from the ethnic Russian way of life. Even police authorities turn a blind eye when local skinhead groups attack immigrants. In addition, Russia has also shown no tolerance to homosexual or progressive groups, stunting their negative effects upon the culture. The birth rate has risen in recent years to levels seen in Western Europe but it’s still not above the death rate. Russia will see a population collapse before a cultural one...

Brazil

We’re seeing rapid movement through stages 2 and 3, where progressive ideology based on the American model is becoming adopted and a large poor population ensure progressive politicians will continue to remain in power with promises of economic redistribution. Within 15 years we should see a sharp drop in birth rates and a relaxation of immigration laws...

America

Some could argue that America is currently experiencing a cultural collapse. It always had a fragile culture because of its immigrant foundations, but immigrants of the past (including my own parents) rapidly acclimated into the host culture to create a sense of national pride around an ethic of hard work and shared democratic values. This is being eroded as a fem-centric culture rises in its place, with its focus on trends, celebrities, homosexuality, multiculturalism, and male-bashing. Natives have become pleasure seekers with little inclination to reproduction during their years of peak fertility...

England

While America always had high amounts of immigration, and therefore a system of integration, England is newer to the game. In the past 20 years, they have massively ramped up their immigration efforts. A visit to London will confirm that the native British are slowly becoming minorities, with their iconic red telephone booths left undisturbed purely for tourist photo opportunities. Approximately 5% of the English population is now Muslim. Instead of acclimatizing, they are achieving early success in creating zones with Sharia law. The English elite, in response, is jailing natives under stringent anti-race laws. England had a highly successful immigration story with Polish immigrants who eagerly acclimated to English culture, but have opened the doors to other peoples who don't want to integrate...

Sweden

Sweden is experiencing a similar immigration situation to England, but they possess a higher amount of self-shame and white guilt. Instead of allowing immigrants who could work in the Swedish economy, they are encouraging migration of asylum seekers who have been made destitute by war. These immigrants enter Sweden and immediately receive social benefits. In effect, Sweden is welcoming the least economically productive people in the world. The immigrants will produce little or no economic benefit, and may even worsen Sweden's economy. Immigrants are turning some parts of Sweden, such as the Rosengard area of Malmö, into a ghetto...

Poland

From my one and half years of living in Poland, I have seen a moderate level of progressive ideological creep, careerism among women, hedonism, and idolation of Western values, particularly out of England, where a large percentage of the Polish population have emigrated for work. Younger Poles may not act much different from their Western counterparts in their party lifestyle behavior, but there nonetheless remains a tenuous maintenance of traditional sex roles. Women of fertile age are pursuing relationships over one-night stands, but careerism is causing them to stall family formation. This puts a downward pressure on birth rates, which stems from significant numbers of fertile young women emigrating to countries like the UK and USA, along with continued economic uncertainties faced from transitioning to capitalism. As Europe's "least multicultural" nation, Poland has long been hesitant to accept immigrants, but this has recently changed and they are encouraging migrants. To its credit, it is seeking first-world entrepreneurs instead of low skilled laborers or asylum seekers. Its cultural fate will be an interesting development in the years to come, but the prognosis will be more negative as long as its young people are eager to leave the homeland...

Poland and Russia show the limitations of Cultural Collapse Theory in that it best applies to first-world nations with highly developed economies. They have low birth rates but...

There can be many paths to cultural destruction, and those nations with the most similarities will gravitate towards the same path, just like how Eastern European nations are suffering low birth rates because of mass emigration due to being introduced into the European Union. ⁵

That's Who We Are

During his presidency, Barack Obama was fond of hectoring the American people with the condescending refrain “that’s not who we are.” He would trot it out regularly to disparage as un-American anyone who disagreed with his predictably progressive policy views on immigration, refugees, health care, or Islamic terrorism.

Who we are, it turns out, is a statist country defined by whatever platitudes are found in the latest iteration of the Democratic Party platform. Who we are, pace Reagan, is an (almost) open borders country of hyphenated Americans with an unwavering faith that “a little intellectual elite in a far-distant capitol can plan our lives for us better than we can plan them ourselves.”

Obama’s America, lo and behold, is the real America.

Citizen Obama was at it again this week in a Facebook post slamming President Trump’s decision to wind down the Deferred Action for Childhood Arrivals (DACA) program (never mind that while in office, President Obama admitted on more than 20 occasions that he had no constitutional authority to create a DACA-like program).

“This action is contrary to our spirit,” Obama wrote. “Ultimately, this is about basic decency. This is about whether we are a people who kick hopeful young strivers out of America, or whether we treat them the way we’d want our own kids to be treated. It’s about who we are as a people—and who we want to be.”

Obama concluded his sermon by trying to define who it is that we are. The mistaken assumptions that inform his definition are common among elites on both ends of the political spectrum. Speaker of the House Paul Ryan (R-Wis.) probably could have offered the same definition (and has in the past come close). As such, his words are worth examining more closely as they are indicative of a particular mindset.

“What makes us American,” Obama first correctly observed, “is not a question of what we look like, or where our names come from, or the way we pray.” Indeed, America’s founding documents affirm the natural equality of all human beings, allow for the full naturalization of immigrants, forbid the establishment of a national religion and guarantee the free exercise of religion for all. In principle—though not in practice of course—anyone can become an American.

“What makes us American,” Obama then added, “is our fidelity to a set of ideals—that all of us are created equal; that all of us deserve the chance to make of our lives what we will; that all of us share an obligation to stand up, speak out, and secure our most cherished values for the next generation.”

As a statement of American national identity, this is partially true. It is true insofar as we are indeed a nation dedicated to certain ideals—the truths we hold to be self-evident. America, alone among the nations of the world, defines itself by a commitment to a set of universal ideas.

We are not, however, a mere “propositional nation,” defined only by abstract ideals and shorn of any ties to its past, its culture, its ancestors, its language, and its land. We are also a particular people bound by “the mystic chords of memory” and shaped by our way of life. Our Declaration of Independence, after all, does not begin with the self-evident truth of human equality, but with “one people”—that is, we Americans—assuming our separate and equal station in the world.

What makes us American is not just “our fidelity to a set of ideals”—but also that we speak English; that we honor our war dead; that we inhabit a land that stretches “from California to the New York island; from the redwood forest to the Gulf Stream waters”; that we naturally love our country and our countrymen more than we do the foreign nations and foreign peoples of the world.

Our dedication to the idea that all men are created equal does not detract from our rootedness in our own history and land. Nor ought it to weaken our attachment to our fellow citizens or erode our national sovereignty.

America, in other words, is both particular and universal. We are particular in our own way, just as Lesotho, Lithuania, and Laos are particular in their own ways. But we are exceptional in making certain universal ideals a constitutive component of our national identity (many countries today affirm these ideals too, but only we make them an inextricable part of who we are).

For some reason, intellectuals on the Right and the Left are uncomfortable with recognizing these two dimensions of Americanness. The neocons and the progressives would reduce us to a propositional nation; the paleocons and the traditionalists to a particular nation. The Founders, by contrast, did not see the need to choose between the two.

By excluding America as a distinct and sovereign country from his definition of America, Obama can suggest we should admit as citizens all those who subscribe to our creed. By his definition, they already are Americans in all but legal status. The distinction between Americans and non-Americans who share our ideals is but accidental.

America the idea has no borders. But America the country does—and must. And it has the sovereign right to control its borders. Regardless of what one thinks about immigration, DACA, and the so-called “dreamers,” there is nothing un-American about upholding the rule of law or affirming the fundamental political distinction between one’s fellow citizens and foreigners—no matter how long they have lived in our country.

In this regard, it is telling how Obama’s definition of who we are does not include the idea that we are a law-abiding people. However difficult it may be to define America, it should be readily apparent that the rule of law is embedded in our DNA. It undergirds our Constitution, it forms our character and it allows for the extraordinary levels of prosperity and freedom we enjoy. As President Trump noted in his statement explaining his decision: “We must also recognize that we are a nation of opportunity because we are a nation of laws.”⁶

A Good Samaritan with Zip Ties

It’s easy to hate imaginary people. Until they fix your car.

In a fascinating article in the Charlotte Observer, liberal activist Ruth Mayer describes how much she hated the President and anyone who voted for him—until her Prius broke down on the way from the Women’s March in Washington DC.

“My fury,” she admits, “has been bottomless.”

But on her way home, when a part of her car’s undercarriage broke loose, a “good Samaritan” in overalls walked up and got to work, zip-tying the piece of her car back in place while ignoring her left-wing bumper sticker.

The man was a self-confessed “redneck” and, she assumed, a Trump voter. As Mayer put it, “the man at the side of the road...reminded me that we were all just people trying to get home safe.”

This good Samaritan, like the original one, shows us that our shared humanity is enough reason to show kindness, even to those who disagree with us. After all, it might be only zip ties these days that are holding this fiercely-divided nation together. ^{*7}

Brainwashed Children

The wicked have successfully brainwashed many young people to believe in phony problems and false solutions. Now they’re using children to take away our rights and freedoms.

These people support the evil that created the problems, and their “solutions” will only ever make things worse, because evil grows and does not stop until people of good stop it.

Blind people participated in “March for Our Lives” around the country, a well-coordinated effort to get rid of the Second Amendment. These people hate God and men. They pretend to be for women and children, but hurt them too; they exploit emotions, imitate logic and put people on an ego trip, motivating them to do wrong..

Over the weekend, indoctrinated high schoolers like David Hogg, Cameron Kasky and Emma Gonzalez, whose parents don’t love them, preached gun control, promoted by activist fake-news media. Their parents turned them over to liberalism. They’ve been paid big money to march in Washington, D.C., by the wicked Oprah Winfrey, Steven Spielberg, Obama-fanatic George Clooney and top Hollywood leftist Jeffrey Katzenberg. They’re also supported by self-important celebrities like Justin Bieber, Alyssa Milano, Amy Schumer, John Legend, Jimmy Fallon and the wolves in sheep’s clothing, Moms Demand Action.

In one interview, David Hogg let off a profanity-laced rant, demonstrating for the cameras as he referred to NRA-supported politicians as “pathetic f—ers that want to keep killing our children.” He accused them of valuing “f—ing money” over “children’s lives.” Of his governor, Rick Scott, he declared, “He does not give a f— about these kids’ lives at all.” He said that his parents’ generations “don’t know how to use a f—ing democracy, so we have to.”

Ironically, the leftism Hogg parrots is what takes children’s lives. Ego-tripping young people like Hogg, Kasky and Gonzalez have been set up to suffer and to spread suffering. The parents will not get away with this—they failed to protect their children, but have sacrificed them to evil. Now good people won’t trust them. Evil will toss them aside when they’re no longer useful—as you see in Hillary Clinton.

During the National School Walkout, I drove by a group of students protesting against our rights. One car in front of me honked in support. I rolled down my window and gave the kids “thumbs down.” I shouted at them, “You stupid idiots! You don’t know what you’re doing! Go back to class!” The dumb kids surrounded my car, and one girl ran up and hit my arm. Police allowed me to move along.

At what should be called “March Against Our Lives” in Los Angeles, I interviewed young kids who said they were afraid for their lives. I asked one black girl: Do you want guns in the schools so that you don’t get killed? She said, “Yes,” that she wants the teachers to have guns to protect the kids. But her teacher pulled her arm and ended the interview, apparently because the girl deviated from the acceptable liberal script—pure evil!

The children of the lie (the liberal media, Democrats, RINOs and Never Trumpers) know the solution to violence: a return to morals and values. But they reject common sense and undermine men and families. They create the circumstances for mass killing—abortion, gun-free zones, broken homes and ghettos. Liberals support division and hate. They bring about more angry single mothers, weak and absent fathers, and mis-educated, unhappy children.

Prisons are so full of Democrat-leaning felons (most raised without their fathers) that liberals want them let out and given “voting rights.” Liberals want socialist-minded refugees, immigrants and illegal aliens in the country to vote for them, even if many are criminals, gang members, terrorists, drug and human traffickers, rapists and murderers—at least they have an electorate to support their freedom-hating causes. They’ll use them up just as they did the blacks, who are so deluded that they vote to support their own suffering.

A group of black Chicago high schoolers met with Florida student activists to discuss “gun violence” and “racism” (neither of which exist—only “people violence” and hate). One ridiculous kid said, “We have to use our white privilege” to speak for dead blacks because the media won’t. But conservative media call out black violence regularly, offering solutions such as a return to marriage, fathers and morality. We’re called “racist” or “Uncle Tom” for it. Liberals push the phony idea of “racism” to keep blacks trapped in the hate and blame that deludes and destroys them.

Do not get caught up in the passions of the present times. Instead, pray. Do not be angry at evil, but overcome it with courage and compassion. Evil does not care about you. It falsely builds you up and tears you down. The world rewards you for supporting its false imitation of righteousness. But soon enough you’re alone in misery. *8

I Used to Hate Guns and the NRA. Then I Was Mugged.

I'd hated guns since I was a teenager. It was a gun that killed John Lennon, after all. Guns killed President John F. Kennedy, Robert F. Kennedy, and Martin Luther King.

Get rid of the guns, problem solved—or so I thought. In December of 2012, I even tweeted President Barack Obama, urging him to repeal the Second Amendment and “stop” the National Rifle Association. (Never mind that a president can't do either by himself.)

Then, a little more than five months later, in May of 2013 in San Francisco, I was mugged.

One guy held a gun in my face, and the other held a gun to the back of my head. They took my MacBook Air, two iPads, an iPhone, an iPod Touch, and my wallet.

After that horrific experience, I slowly came to see things from a different perspective. Literally, I would become the personification of the old adage that a conservative is a liberal who has been mugged by reality.

Later, I became a homeowner and realized the best way to defend against a home invasion is with a firearm. So I became a gun owner.

Not long after, I discovered I really enjoyed target shooting at the range, so I joined the NRA, and eventually became a conservative and an outspoken Second Amendment advocate.

But no, that's not the reason I donate to the NRA. Teen activist David Hogg and actress Alyssa Milano's anti-gun screeds are what inspire me to donate to the NRA—so that everyone at the NRA can keep working to protect our constitutional rights.

I donate to the NRA after mass shootings because of the anti-gun left. In fact, progressives calling for boycotts of the NRA and for gun bans are why thousands of new people join, and why current members donate more.

The left is the very reason donations to the NRA tripled in February after the horrific school shooting in Parkland, Florida.

When #KillTheNRA was trending on Twitter, I gave 11 NRA gift memberships.

And yes, we should allow teachers to be armed. Across the country, many teachers are being trained and are starting to carry concealed so they can fight back and defend their students.

Let's give our teachers a chance, rather than having them sacrifice their lives by shielding their students with their bodies. It's absurd that we protect our stadiums, banks, courthouses—and elected officials—with armed personnel, but leave our classrooms vulnerable to attack.

Just as former NRA instructor Stephen Willeford stepped up during a deadly mass shooting in November at a church in Sutherland Springs, Texas, and saved lives by stopping the gunman with his AR-15, NRA members are ready and willing to risk their lives to save others.

Gun-free zones aren't the answer, and other gun laws are not working. Most gun control measures tend to disarm law-abiding citizens rather than criminals, who do not obey gun laws.

The NRA was founded in the 19th century and has been fighting for our constitutional rights and educating millions of people on the safe use of firearms ever since.

So in response to the NRA's fiercest critics: No, we NRA members do not care more about guns than children, and no, the NRA is not a "terrorist" organization...^{*10}

"Does anyone seriously believe that people who are prepared to defy the laws against murder are going to obey laws against owning guns or large-capacity magazines?"—Thomas Sowell

The World Order has no religious, political or economic program except World Slavery. Only by subduing all potential opposition can the parasite guarantee his position of lodging on the host. The World Order sets up countless groups to promote any type of idea, and then sets up other groups to fanatically oppose them, but the masters have no dedication to anything except slavery. As R.E. McMaster wrote in The Reaper, "The goal of international communism is not to destroy Western international debt capitalism. The goal of international communism is to enslave mankind at the behest of Western international debt capitalism." This is all you can ever know about the present world situation, and it is all you need to know.^{*11}

Farewell to the ‘Conservative Movement’

Movements are, almost by definition, attractive to the young and the emotionally immature. Followers love to follow; even more, they love to memorize catechisms and rote talking points, which they parrot on the air and in column inches, as if by simply asserting their “principles” they are proving them as well.

Eventually, though, both content and context are lost and only the talking points remain. The argument from authority becomes as circular and self-referential as any obscure religious contretemps, and of interest only to the anointed. Which is why they fall upon each other with the glee of zealots who have been given orders to purge the heretics by any means necessary.

I have coined a portmanteau term for this state of affairs: “preinciples.” You know what they are: smaller government, less regulation, free trade, federalism, etc. It’s a creed, constantly professed, acolytes of (fill in the blank: Mises, Hayek, Strauss, Buckley) reassuring each other that by consulting the sacred texts they will always have the correct views on the issues, and thus ensure their place among the elect.

Political creeds, however, are generally the provinces of the Left, which believes in history’s “arc” and “iron laws”—“scientific” dialectical materialism, socialism, communism, and the rest of the intellectual charlatanism (including psychiatry and sociology) that has followed in the wake of Rousseau, Marx, Lenin, and Mao. “Little Red Books” and Five-Year Plans are the staples of this form of political worship.

I’ve addressed the programmatic Left in my two most recent books, The Devil’s Pleasure Palace—a study of the eternal battle between good and evil, centered on the moral nihilism of the Frankfurt School of 20th-century Communist philosophers—and The Fiery Angel, a series of interlocking essays regarding some of the touchstones of Western art and culture, from the Greeks through the 20th century, and how they provide the antidote to the spiritual poison injected into Western veins by the Frankfurters and their fellow travelers in academe and now journalism.

Now, does everything from the Oresteia to Wagner’s Ring cycle form a coherent, intellectually and emotionally consistent “conservative” program, by which we can live our lives? Clearly not. The great works of art are and must always be non-didactic. Politicized art is worthless; but art that has political resonance generally stands the test of time.

To my ears, then, the constant harping in some quarters on “movement” conservatism is reminiscent of everything I’ve ever heard from the Left, or experienced in East Germany and the old Soviet Union. I’m not suggesting that “true” conservatism involves replacing one (transient) set of “preinciples” with another one, albeit far older. Rather, my argument is that conservatism isn’t a movement at all. Nor should it be. Rather, it’s a simple acknowledgement of timeless verities and a willingness to defend them against malevolent faddishness masquerading as “progress,” whose object is the destruction of our culture and its replacement with... well, nothing.

In short, it’s a recognition of great cultural peril, and the willingness to do something about it.

Think of the struggle between Right and Left in military terms. We are the defenders of the citadels of Western culture, which are our hard-won patrimony. Leftists are the attackers, always seeking to undermine, to sap, to breach, to assault; for them, as for Hillary Clinton in her Wellesley senior thesis, “there is only the fight.” They stay awake nights trying to figure out new ways to bring the walls down; as I like to say, they never stop, they never sleep, they never quit.

But attackers have a problem: they generally need three times the manpower of the defenders in order to win. A well-defended, confident citadel, with plenty of provisions, doughty defenders, and at least one supply line, can hold out forever. Constantinople eventually fell to the Muslims after 700 years of battering, and then only because the Western Roman Empire had collapsed a thousand years prior, and Byzantium's relationship with the emerging nation-states of Europe was often fraught; the Crusaders, after all, sacked the city even before the Turks did.

On the other hand, in 1565, the 6,000 or so Knights Hospitallers and other fighters on the island of Malta held out against Turkish force numbering nearly 40,000. And, of course, in World War II both Leningrad and Stalingrad repelled the might of the Wehrmacht after prolonged and deadly sieges.

The "conservative" advantage, then, lies not in a set of policy prescriptions but in its bedrock beliefs, which center on the necessity of preserving, protecting, and defending the Western civilization that eventually codified those principles in the U.S. Constitution, and which itself is now under attack. By articulating a set of policy principles, "movement" conservatism puts those principles on the negotiating table, and over the course of the past 75 years or so, has gradually bargained them away for a mess of pottage.

Real conservatism, however, conserves. It understands what's a stake, whom to fight, and how to win; after all, it has more than 3,000 years of experience, much of which was recorded and remains accessible today. The Left tries to combat this disadvantage (via its control of the educational system) by delegitimizing and eradicating the past. By cutting us off from our cultural wellsprings, they hope to disarm and demoralize us. Don't let them... ^{*15}

Whites Are Committing Suicide At ‘Unprecedented Rate’

It seems two researchers, one a Nobel Prize recipient, discovered that white Americans in their 40s and 50s are “committing suicide at an unprecedented rate,” as well as dying from rampant drug abuse. As the Times reported:

Analyzing health and mortality data from the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention and from other sources, they concluded that rising annual death rates among this group are being driven not by the big killers like heart disease and diabetes but by an epidemic of suicides and afflictions stemming from substance abuse: alcoholic liver disease and overdoses of heroin and prescription opioids.

Hit the pause button.

Just two days earlier, Americans were likewise stunned by a “60 Minutes” segment titled “Heroin in the Heartland” chronicling an epidemic of heroin and opioid addiction among white, middle-class, suburban high school students in Columbus, Ohio—and, experts say, throughout the nation.

As CBS correspondent Bill Whitaker explained, heroin dealers connected to Mexican cartels “are making huge profits by expanding to new, lucrative markets: suburbs all across the country,” where they are targeting “a new set of consumers: high school students, college athletes, teachers and professionals.”

Regarding those way-over-prescribed opioids (synthetic morphine-like pain pills), a Columbus nurse told “60 Minutes”: “Last year, three quarters of a billion pain pills were prescribed by doctors in Ohio—nearly 65 pills for every man, woman and child in the state.”

Both news reports—one about middle-aged white people and the other about suburban youngsters in their teens and 20s, all either dead or in the process of killing themselves through substance abuse—have fueled the national discussion all week.

To which I can only say: Don’t be surprised. Welcome to Obama’s America.

Let’s take a quick break from our obsession with the day’s political news, with all its scandals, outrages and threats, and take a hard look at what’s really going on all around us every day in the wake of the Obama-left’s much-heralded “fundamental transformation of America.”

Fasten your seatbelt:

- “Drug overdose deaths are the leading cause of injury death in the United States, ahead of deaths from motor vehicle accidents and firearms,” the DEA just announced. Equally disturbing, Stars and Stripes reports that in recent years more active-duty U.S. soldiers have been dying by suicide than in combat.
- Shocking research from the federal Centers for Disease Control and Prevention shows that one in five of all high-school-aged children in the United States has been diagnosed with ADHD, while a large study of New York City residents shows, sadly, that one in five preteens—children aged six to 12—have been medically diagnosed with either ADHD, anxiety, bipolar disorder, or depression.

- Equally alarming, one in 10 girls reportedly engages in “self-harm” in the form of “cutting” their bodies with a knife or razor, while New York’s state Department of Health reports that “self-inflicted injuries, such as cutting, burning, and pinching, are the second leading cause of hospitalizations due to injury for children ages 15 to 19 years.”
- Fully one-third of the nation’s employees suffer chronic debilitating stress, and more than half of all “millennials” (18- to-33-year-olds) experience a level of stress that keeps them awake at night, including large numbers diagnosed with depression or anxiety disorder.
- Incredibly, eleven percent of all Americans aged twelve and older are currently taking antidepressants—those powerfully mood-altering psychiatric drugs with the FDA’s “suicidality” warning label and alarming correlation with mass shootings.
- Add to that the tens of millions of users of all other types of psychiatric drugs, including the 6.4 million American children between 4 and 17 diagnosed with ADHD and prescribed Ritalin or similar psycho-stimulants. Throw in the 28 percent of American adults with a drinking problem—that’s more than 60 million—plus the 24 million using illegal drugs like marijuana, cocaine, heroin and hallucinogens, and pretty soon a picture emerges of a nation of drug-takers, with well over a hundred million of us dependent on one toxic substance or another, legal or illegal, just to get through life.
- And Americans aren’t addicted just to drugs and alcohol, but, it seems, to everything: Enormous numbers of men, women, and children are addicted to online pornography (85 percent of young men and nearly 50 percent of young women reportedly watch porn at least once a month). That may be why an astonishing 110 million Americans currently have a sexually transmitted disease. Food addiction is also rampant, with one in three American adults clinically obese, and more than one in six of the nation’s youth.

What on earth is going on?

... I argue that the radical upsurge in all these current-day problems is overwhelmingly caused or exacerbated by the influence of the political and cultural left, which today dominates virtually all of America’s major institutions, including education, culture, news and entertainment media, and government. I connect the dots between, on one hand, the progressive left’s utopian political and moral transformation of America over the last two generations (now in overdrive in the age of Obama) and, on the other hand, the tidal wave of human misery, depression, dysfunction, brokenness, family breakdown, mental illness and addiction we increasingly see all around us.

Bottom line: The left is not only unhinged from reality, it is driving millions of unsuspecting Americans over the edge as well.

Consider: Long before Obama came along, the left gave us two big things:

1. It launched the “sexual liberation movement” (including the LGBT juggernaut, which today demands that teenage schoolgirls be forced to shower with boys who think they’re girls). This ever-metastasizing revolution has given us wild sexual anarchy, ubiquitous porn addiction, family breakdown, rampant divorce (and subsequent government dependency), widespread fatherlessness and all the suffering, criminality and pathology that causes, drug abuse, abortion (3,000 per day) and misery all around.
2. The secular left also has indoctrinated our children, implicitly and sometimes explicitly, to believe there is no God, no objective standard of right and wrong, no moral standard and no truth. That in itself, whether we realize it or not, rips a person’s soul in two and creates a huge pain and emptiness that will be filled—often with drugs and sex.

Now put yourself in the place of these heroin-addicted high school kids on “60 Minutes.” Not only have many had their faith, values and morality ripped off, but for close to half of their lives Barack Obama has been president. Consider further that a president is somewhat like a “father of the country” during his time in office, automatically exerting a sort of “radiant effect” on the population, just as a dad does on his family. Unfortunately, instead of being blessed with an honorable, moral, inspiring, Reagan-like figure as president, today’s youth have been saddled with a bitter and dishonest “father” who lies constantly, deceives the “family” every day, encourages his “kids” to engage in the most ignoble and perverse behaviors, rebukes them for speaking honestly to him, betrays his friends and supports his enemies, all while pretending to care for his “family.”

What do we expect to happen to the next generation when we take God, morality and American exceptionalism away from them? They’re going to be angry, conflicted, lost, and full of a pain and emptiness they can’t even identify. Want more concrete evidence that the left is driving Americans crazy?

- A major study involving more than 800,000 women shows that pregnant women who had an abortion “face double the risk of mental health problems.”
- Multiple studies show Democrats are twice as likely to be mentally ill as Republicans.
- “Psychology Today” reports that “Today’s college students are suffering from an epidemic of mental illnesses.” While citing dire trends (one in three students suffers “prolonged periods of depression,” one in four reports feeling suicidal), the article never quite manages to identify the underlying reasons for today’s “greater levels of stress and psychopathology [in college] than any time in the nation’s history.”
- Yet, according to recent peer-reviewed research, campus life’s widespread “hooking up” culture causes significantly “higher levels of depression” (not to mention sexual violence and STDs) in college women. Again, we can thank the left for unleashing “sexual liberation” on America, which pervades university life and is encouraged by perverse programs like the popular annual “Sex Week” on-campus event.
- Likewise, consider political correctness, which even Newsweek acknowledged is a “Marxist,” “totalitarian” system of thought control and which caused historian William Lind to characterize today’s top campuses as “small, ivy-covered North Koreas.” It turns out, in an anxious age of “micro-aggressions,” “trigger warnings” and multiple new gender variants, the punitive PC culture is literally making students mentally ill. The widely read September 2015 article in The Atlantic, “The Coddling of the American Mind,” revealed that what is happening on today’s college campuses, especially with regard to policing speech and punishing “offenders,” is “likely to engender patterns of thought that are surprisingly similar to those long identified by cognitive behavioral therapists as causes of depression and anxiety. The new protectiveness may be teaching students to think pathologically.” Wow, and all for only $60,000 a year!

So, what about those white middle-aged Americans dying from “an unprecedented rate” of suicide and drug overdoses? Turns out, according to another New York Times report, that’s the same age group for which divorce is now skyrocketing! As the Daily Mail summarizes in its headline: “Over 50s fuel U.S. divorce revolution: Record number of older couples break up with a quarter now splitting up later in life.” That is depressing—which just may be why women in their 40s and 50s are so prone to being diagnosed as depressed, with an astonishing 23 percent of them—almost one in four—now taking antidepressants.

One more wrinkle: The Princeton researchers claim the white, middle-age suicides and drug-related deaths tend to occur more frequently among the less well educated, who, the study says, are suffering “the most financial distress” during today’s pathetic Obama economy. Unfortunately, that’s what happens when you elevate a Marxist revolutionary to the White House and place him in charge of the most successful and powerful free-market economy in world history.

But enough of statistics and studies. Let's just gaze directly at this extraordinary situation in the bright sunlight of America's traditional Judeo-Christian values and sensibilities, and we'll clearly discern how the political and cultural left have corrupted the American mind and soul.

Question: Do you think telling Americans, in a multitude of ways as today's culture and education system consistently do, that God does not exist has no effect on their mental health and happiness?

Do you think aborting almost 60 million American children in the four-plus decades since the Supreme Court legalized it in 1973—and the not-subtle message this sanitized slaughter sends throughout society about the lack of sacredness of human life—has no effect on people's mental health? Do you think a mother's sudden realization that she has ended the life of her own child—a realization that often dawns immediately after the "procedure" is over, and it's too late—exerts no negative impact on the health and happiness of the tens of millions of mothers who have experienced this trauma?

Do you think the legalization of marijuana in state after state, creating a celebratory atmosphere around pot and other drugs, doesn't contribute to drug dependency, not to mention growing psychosis—especially when today's marijuana is known to be many times more potent than in decades past?

Do you think, in the Internet age, that ubiquitous graphic images and videos of intimate body parts and hard-core sex—images that intrude and are indelibly burned into the minds and souls of tens of millions of young and old alike—does not awaken and feed a very dark nature, and exacerbate all manner of personal, relational, marital, and mental health problems?

Do you think, for America's military members, that having a president who—let's just say it—hates America and therefore logically cannot have American soldiers' best interests at heart in his decisions as commander in chief, wouldn't cause tremendous stress and morale problems in the armed forces, possibly even contributing to growing levels of alcohol and prescription drug abuse a Department of Defense study says have exploded into a "public health crisis"?

Do you think the miserable economy that results when a far-left, capitalism-hating president tries to reshape the world's most powerful and successful free-market economy doesn't drive some people toward drug dependency and suicide? Not being employed when one needs to work causes great stress, fear, guilt, insecurity, and feelings of inadequacy and desperation that can easily lead to escape into drugs and alcohol.

Do you think indoctrinating and pressuring young children to affirm that two men kissing or getting "married" is perfectly normal—or that forcing teenage girls to shower with boys who are under the delusion that they are girls—has no long-term effect on their mental health and happiness? When, as happens today in America, openly gay and lesbian schoolteachers emotionally manipulate classrooms of four-year-olds to embrace the idea that two men or two women marrying each other is wonderful—and make these same children feel ashamed, as though they're somehow bigoted and hateful if they don't embrace this—those teachers are brainwashing your children.

There are many other examples that could be cited here, but suffice to say this process of confusing, corrupting and demoralizing the greatest nation on earth has been ongoing and, of course, long precedes Barack Obama. Indeed,

Americans could not have chosen as their leader someone as transcendently unworthy of the presidency as Obama without first having allowed their minds and hearts to be captured. Through constant indoctrination, intimidation, and emotional manipulation (as well as being continually rewarded once they have “converted”), a sizable part of the American electorate has been programmed over the course of decades by a subversive school system, an equally perverse “news” establishment, and a shameful and degrading culture.

Of course, at the very nucleus of the myriad assaults on traditional America is the rejection—at least by society’s elites—of God and the repudiation of the Judeo-Christian values that have long undergirded our civilization. This in turn has led to pervasive societal disintegration and a Pandora’s box of endless and unimaginable problems. Many have lost hope, and hopelessness leads easily to self-destructive behaviors like substance abuse and even suicide. But our situation is far from hopeless...

We have allowed a lawless government and godless culture to rob us of many things, including that most precious of commodities during hard times: hope. Many Americans are losing hope that a vexing, painful, conflict-ridden life can get better.

But hope is always nearby, as it is a gift from God irrespective of our outward circumstances.

In the final analysis what we all really need to do—as Dr. Ben Carson often says—“isn’t brain surgery.” We need to reclaim what is rightfully ours, starting with our God-given values, our faith, morality and integrity and practice them in every moment of our lives. Then, just maybe, we’ll be properly fortified and strengthened and blessed to take back our culture, our institutions, our constitutional government and our great nation.

Just don’t tell me it’s not possible. With God, all things are possible. *¹⁶
