Lawless ‘Social Justice Warriors’ Must Be Stopped

“The law is not made for a righteous man, but for the lawless and disobedient ...” —1 Timothy 1:9

Last week, college Republicans at DePaul University hosted a forum featuring outspoken gay Trump supporter and Breitbart Editor Milo Yiannopoulos. The event devolved into a total debacle when Black Lives Matter crashed the event. Two disrupters rushed the stage, snatched the microphone and threatened to punch Milo while about a dozen of their comrades blocked the stage.

Despite reports that organizers shelled out $1,000 for security, no one attempted to stop or remove the Black Lives Matter thugs. Police showed up almost 20 minutes after the mayhem began and, to the dismay of the college Republicans, they didn’t remove one unruly black activist. They simply stood against the wall and watched the chaos unfold.

Black Lives Matter is a group of lawless agitators who must be stopped. They have no respect for authority. Since they have no home training nor morality in their hearts, they need the law to keep them in check, or their violence and anger will spread like a cancer, and injustice will continue to reign.

Despite Black Lives Matter's outrageous (yet typical) behavior at DePaul, neither the media nor the school's administration repudiated the agitators. In fact, Dr. Shu-Ju Cheng, a sociology professor at DePaul, announced her resignation in a public Facebook post and denounced the university for allowing the college Republicans to hold the forum. She blasted the notion of universities being "neutral platforms for 'equal' exchanges of ideas" and said "so-called free speech" is "delusional." According to Cheng, "that positional objectivity ends up reinforcing the exact inequalities and dominant ideologies upon which this institution is built."

Breitbart News reports that the "social justice warriors" who violently rushed the stage, Edward Ward and Kayla Johnson, were mentored and trained by professor Valerie Johnson (no relation to Kayla), the department chair of political science at DePaul, who specializes in African-American politics and urban education. She is a Black Lives Matter activist who has argued that a "fully democratic society" is impossible in the context of "white privilege," and she has participated in race marches in Chicago.

Professor Johnson sent out the following tweet in support of the disruptive actions by blacks at DePaul:

"@americabadu @kaylaliese_I support your stand against bigotry!!! Hate won't prevail."

Violent Black Lives Matter agitators don't belong on college campuses; they belong in jail. If it weren't for affirmative action, most wouldn't even be on campus. It's time to give these idiots the boot and make room for serious students and professors.

These people feel emboldened to act out because they know that guilt-ridden liberal administrations at these universities will excuse their misbehavior. They also know most police won't lay hands on them for fear of being sued for use of "excessive force."

Black Lives Matter supporters have disrupted Donald Trump rallies and attacked his supporters. They've encouraged violence against the NYPD by leading rallies while chanting, "What do we want? Dead cops! When do we want them? Now!" They've fueled anti-police riots in Ferguson and Baltimore. They recently showed up to protest the acquittal of Baltimore Police Officer Edward Nero in the death of black drug dealer Freddie Gray. It was there that they screamed obscenities and threatened to harm officer Nero's family as they left the courthouse.

And these are the same "activists" Barack Obama legitimized by meeting with them at the White House!

These people are not of God, and they have no love in their hearts for anyone. Their black parents have failed them. The so-called black "leaders" (including Barack Obama and the black-led Department of Justice) are encouraging them to hate and blame whites.

Police officers on the front lines feel the brunt of this hate. They're punished for doing their jobs. As a result, police aren't making as many arrests. In Chicago, police stops are down by 90 percent compared to last year, and shootings are up 80 percent!

The lawlessness is spreading. Recently, Hispanic protesters in New Mexico opposing Donald Trump's candidacy toppled trash cans and barricades outside the Albuquerque Convention Center. They threw burning T-shirts and rocks and injured several officers. Inside the venue, protesters shouted, held up banners and resisted removal by security.

These violent Hispanics see police and Republicans as their enemies. Yet Gov. Susana Martinez appeased illegal immigration supporters by harshly criticizing Trump for his truthful remarks about the criminal aliens coming from Mexico and his plan to build a wall (a big beautiful wall!). But she was silent about the riot and violence perpetrated by Hispanics in her state. What a hypocrite!

Americans should not tolerate this violence from any group. We must take a stand.

Throughout history, America has dealt with many radical, subversive groups. We dealt with the Ku Klux Klan, the mafia and the Black Panther Party. Hispanic rioters and Black Lives Matter require punishment just like violent hate groups of the past.

Evil won't stop on its own. We must support police and speak against the lawless who terrorize and bring anarchy to college campuses and cities. ^{*2}

Homeless Trump supporter guards Donald Trump's star on Hollywood Blvd

Days after Donald Trump's Hollywood Walk of Fame star was vandalized, a homeless Trump supporter now guards Trump's star on Hollywood Blvd against social justice warriors.

Our Enemy the State

There was a book written by Albert Jay Nock called "Our Enemy the State." The author passed away around 1945 and he had written this book during the depression and during the time that total socialism was being established in the "United States." It was published in 1935. I think that this book should be required reading for those people who wish to understand how government really works or doesn't work depending upon one's point of view. I'm going to discuss the various points that Nock writes about and then where appropriate I will also discuss my own experience with the state and the problems I encountered.

Conquest and Confiscation

The governments exist by utilizing the monopoly on violence. The purpose of government is to conquer the people and the territory and then confiscate all of their property. This is really the true intention of all governments. These governments in and of themselves produce nothing and they depend upon society to support them. However, given the evil nature of government, we can see that they are the instigators of social unrest. They create problems among people where virtually none existed. By establishing a state under conquest, the confiscation now occurs by taxation. Of course, without the monopoly on violence, the government couldn't maintain its power. It has no intellectual nor does it have any moral authority. Its authority comes only from violence. It is conquest and confiscation; comply or die. This is the true foundation of all the governments of the world as they are all Satanic-communistic in nature. Their styles may change, but the substance is always the same: communist.

Collapse of civilization

Nock looked forward to the collapse of civilization. He didn't hold much hope for correcting the problem by having different people taking the reigns of government. His idea was that once civilization collapsed, there would hopefully be some smarter people available to reconstruct it. And now we see in our time today; 2015, the collapse of civilization due to a lack of any moral standards. The government itself promotes homosexuality as a legitimate behavior when for thousands of years people have known it to be extremely perverse. By allowing such evil to reside within society, the end result will obviously be a complete collapse of civilization. We may be witnessing the natural progression of this collapse which started many years ago.

Govtards have little intellectual integrity

I use the word "govtards" and this isn't used in the book. However, I have personally experienced the evil and the stupidity of govtards. I have seen judges hide exculpatory evidence from the jury ensuring my conviction on a law that never existed. And it shows the lack of "intellectual integrity."

Here is an example from the book:

"Practically all the sovereign rights and powers of the smaller political units—all of them that are significant enough to be worth absorbing—have been absorbed by the federal unit; nor is this all. State power has not only been thus concentrated at Washington, but it has been so far concentrated into the hands of the Executive that the existing regime is a regime of personal government. It is nominally republican, but actually monocratic; a curious anomaly, but highly characteristic of a people little gifted with intellectual integrity."

Sovereign Rights

If there were any sovereign rights, then they were lost during the civil war and the Reconstruction Acts. Most of the state constitutions from 1878 forward were changed to conform to the new structure of government. This is why we have the obnoxious 14th Amendment which was fraudulently passed by the "Congress." The southern states were told by the north that they couldn't be a part of the nation unless they voted to pass the 14th Amendment. If that was the case, then the south had no authority to vote on anything in the first place. The republican or voting part of establishing government is just window dressing. Democracy is simply lipstick on the communist pig. The political class in the "United States" is actually the communist class and their church is satanic.

Extinction of social power

Nock explains that the federal government absorbs the social power and "that the State dominates the nation because it represents it." However, any nation that has communism, socialism, or fascism as their political foundation will always fail and bring disorder to society and civilization. In my view, the reason is that these political systems violate the natural law or the commandments, and they violate them at every level. Everything is a fraud and a lie when dealing with governments. For instance: a lot of people think the Bill of Rights is something of value. My answer to that is to try to use them. My experience with it is that no one has any rights under such a system and I was able to experience that first hand. Not only is social power absorbed by the State, but also the social power is destroyed.^{*3}

Feel the Burn

Bernie Sanders' campaign slogan is "Feel the Bern" and I think this is very appropriate since Sanders is a Communist Jew who claims to be a "democratic socialist." Now, the word socialist is interchangeable with communist. And what the people who are voting for Bernie are not understanding is that the man is essentially a communist and communism comes from Karl Marx and Frederick Engels who were Talmudic Jews. Of course, I think all govtards are communists because they have all of the Ten Planks of the Communist Manifesto in place within all of the governments of the world. Most of the problems of the world are caused by communism. Socialism and communism come from the pit of hell and those who like it should get on a boat or plane to Cuba and stay there.

Democracy is not freedom

Someone said long ago: "Democracy is two wolves and a sheep deciding who is going to be for dinner." In today's political systems, the stupid and unintelligent have the same power as someone who is intelligent and uses common sense. The stupid's vote counts the same as the vote that was well thought out. Democracy is intended to give the people the idea that they actually have a choice in choosing their leaders. The problem is that the voting process is controlled by cheats and crooks and they manipulate the results to suit their agenda. The end result is that the worst people end up as their leaders. These leaders, in turn, put forward the agenda of their masters. Thus, the system in place is that of a slave state where people, on a daily basis, have to endure some asshole from the government telling them what to do and when they can do it. In a moral society, the government would not be necessary. This system is a proven failure.

Socialism is a parasite on the people

Bernie Sanders is a communist who wants to take other people's money and spend it the way he wants. And this is the problem. The people who earn the money should be the ones to decide how their money is earned. The people are entitled to keep everything that they earn with their labor. Anyone who advocates an income tax is a communist as that idea is the 2nd plank of the Communist Manifesto. If people want to live in a socialist system should do it voluntarily and leave the rest of us out of it.

Communism is a slave system and theft

Democracy gives the illusion of choice. If anything, the choice is of one's slave master. A vote for anyone is a vote for who is going to hold the whip over the backs of the public. The real power in this system is by force, violence, and deception. The Bernie Sander's "movement" looks like a type of Bolshevik political process that killed over 40-50 million people in Russia. The political system is doing everything wrong and a lot of people will suffer from the results. The stupidity of thinking that someone can do anything good with an evil system is not being realistic. You cannot get good fruit from the rotten tree of Marxism. And while Bernie looks revolutionary, he really is just the same old shit wrapped up in a pretty (ugly) package. He is the turd on the wedding cake.

Socialism is immoral because it requires everyone to participate. Socialism is an economic and political system that is a proven failure. And even worse, it is a system of theft that violates the natural order as God created. Socialism is the Luciferian mindset which is completely insane and immoral. ^{*5}

Washington's Plan: Welfare For All

Leave it to the New York Times to provide what passes for wisdom among the elitists you find in Manhattan and Georgetown salons when they're not at their offices telling us what to do or on TV telling us what to think.

Exhibit A: the essay the smart set chattered about this week, "By Opposing Obama, the Republicans Created Trump." It was written by Steven Rattner. The Times identifies him as "a Wall Street executive."

That's like describing the Son of Sam as a New York City resident.

If you were to create a living embodiment of cronyism and everything wrong with the political-financial complex that's bled our economy dry, that creature would be Steven Rattner.

The appropriately named Rattner paid over $10 million in fines for bribing public officials to steer New York state pension funds to his Wall Street firm. Unlike some of his less-connected accomplices in the scheme, Rattner managed to escape perjury charges, prison time and lifetime exile from the financial industry only because Andrew Cuomo, then state attorney general, needed Rattner's Wall Street friends when he became governor.

It's touching that the New York Times and MSNBC offers this repeat offender rehabilitation services even as lessers struggle to get a barber's license.

Rattner's criminal career didn't end on Wall Street. Obama put him in charge of the GM bailout despite his criminal record and his having no experience in manufacturing. In that capacity, Rattner robbed thousands of engineers of the retirement benefits they were promised while ensuring politically connected unions were made whole. And Rattner saw to it that after the American taxpayers bailed out General Motors, GM would repay the favor by closing American plants and moving its car-making operations to China.

That gets us to the substance of his essay.

Rattner says Republicans "created the anger that lifted [Trump's] candidacy by years of systematically and effectively preventing passage of legislation that might have ameliorated the tough economic state of Mr. Trump's core voters," whom he describes as "disproportionately white, middle-aged, working-class men without college educations, a group whose fortunes have flagged as globalization and new technology have rendered millions of jobs obsolete and cut into the wages of many more."

This is rich. If you want to "ameliorate the tough economic state of Mr. Trump's core voters," you could start by sending Rattner and his fellow parasites to Guantanamo...

Rattner and Obama (along with top Republicans) support the job-killing trade deals. His gripe is that the GOP hasn't signed on to the fake-work schemes Obama plans for those he's robbed of private sector jobs.

Rattner's prescription for the lousy economy: "Extended unemployment benefits for the long-term unemployed, wage insurance, a higher minimum wage and the like." In short, have the government make sure everyone gets paid.

They used to tell us better-paying high-tech jobs in the new information economy would replace those manufacturing jobs sent to Mexico and China. Not anymore.

Now we're told we should get "wage insurance" to help us survive on crappy-paying jobs.

Wage insurance is the newest euphemism for making everyone dependent on a government handout. Under this scheme, someone whose job is sent overseas and ends up in a lower-paid job (as most people do) would receive half of the lost wages for two years, up to $10,000. This is in Obama's latest budget, and the Obamatrade supporters are hot on it. It's amazing the guys peddling this drivel are considered financial wizards.

We're supposed to believe wage insurance will fulfill that self-respecting "white, middle-aged, working-class man"?

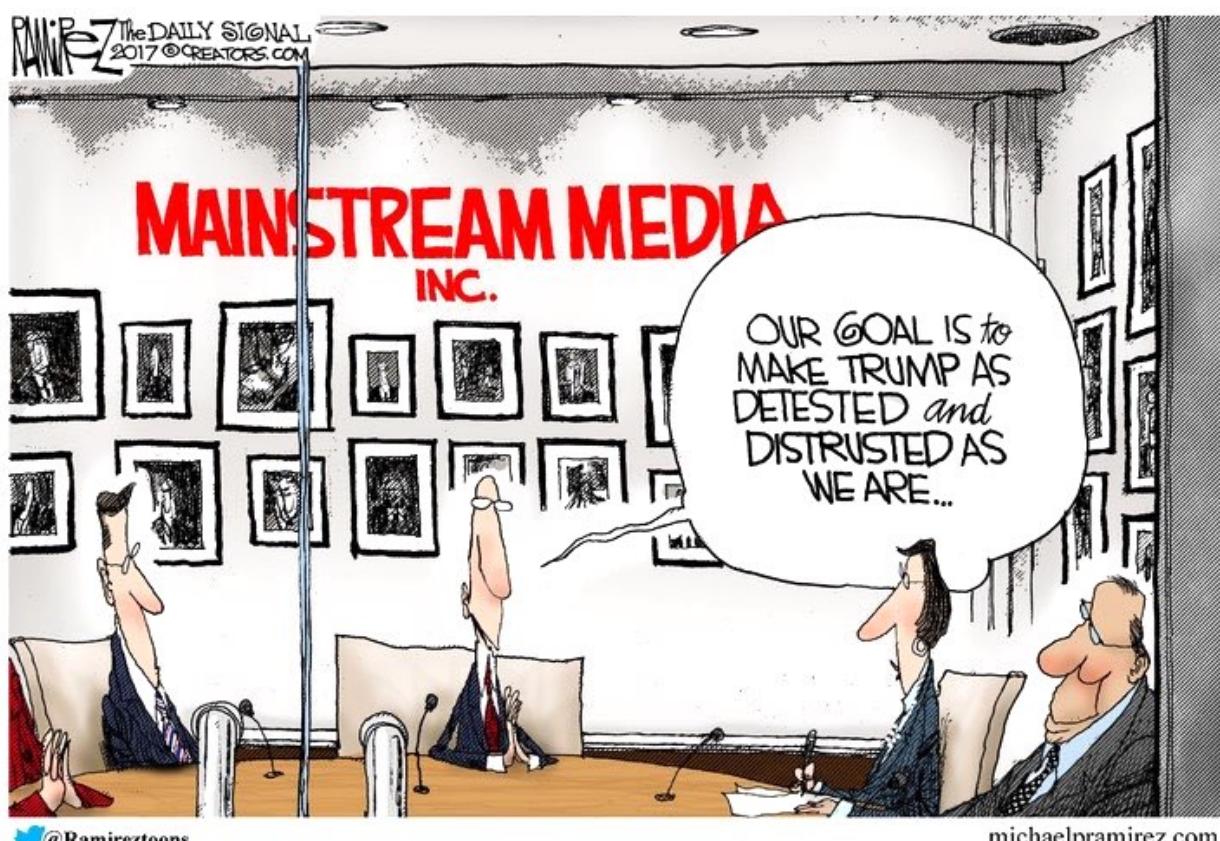

Western civilization was founded on precepts immortalized in the Bible, among them, Man shall earn his daily bread by the sweat of his brow, and Man does not live on bread alone.

Once upon a time in America, parents would teach their kids, "Have faith in G-d, find your calling, pursue it with all your heart, all your soul and all your might, and you will have a family you love and provide for when you grow up."

According to Rattner and his ilk, Man does live by bread alone, and the government will provide it.

In the America they envision, parents will tell their children, "Don't worry, the government will give you a check whether you have a job or not."

Now we can finally see the future the bipartisan elite has planned for what was once known as the Land of the Free and the Home of the Brave. ^{*6}

The America-Basher In Chief Rolls On

How could America have twice elected a president who not only can't stand America but also won't perform his constitutional duty of defending it?

Even some former administration officials and rank-and-file Democrats are finally recognizing that there is something strange about a commander in chief who declines to listen to his advisers on terrorism, won't read their daily briefings and is uninterested in their threat assessments.

It's sad that so many refused to take Obama seriously when he promised to fundamentally transform America. It's inexcusable that the media and so many naive voters believed that his radical past and his ongoing affiliation with the Rev. Jeremiah Wright's racist church were irrelevant. It's disgraceful that a man who pledged to unite America on race, gender and income groups has intentionally polarized us to a point not seen since the 1960s. It's contemptible that he has used his office to alienate citizens from law enforcement officials throughout the nation. It's abominable that he is systematically dismantling our defense capabilities and approaching foreign policy as if his actions and inactions had no more consequences than a chalkboard exercise by a clique of airheaded leftist professors in their faculty lounge.

Islamist terrorists are waging a global war against America and our allies, and the president won't even identify our enemy. He sees Christians, Republicans and conservatives as the real threat to America—the distorted version of America, that is, that he envisions. He continues to trash America on foreign soil at every opportunity.

I (and others) have long been saying that Obama is obsessed with apologizing for America. Many of us documented his world apology tour, whereby he deeply criticized this nation at every stop of his globetrotting junket. Yet his shameless defenders say he was just building bridges and alliances. Talk about a bridge to nowhere.

I wonder whether these intellectually dishonest defenders will still deny that Obama is apologizing for America after hearing his words from Malaysia last week. Actually, I don't wonder. They'll love it. They are fellow America haters and have never been more ecstatic about a president—one who is finally using the immense power of the presidential office to tear this nation apart.

If you think my words are harsh, it's only because you are not talking to people all over this nation who are feeling and thinking exactly as I am. They are legion. They are fed up. They are not having any more of it.

At a town hall meeting in Kuala Lumpur, Malaysia, on Friday, Obama denigrated the United States for its hypocrisy, its "growing inequality" and the inadequacies of our political system. A Martian traveler might well conclude that this man hasn't occupied the Oval Office for the past seven years. Why doesn't Obama just go on TV and confess that his entire presidency has been a failure—by his own regrettable benchmarks?

Concerning America's hypocrisy, he told his rapt audience that we have to have some humility and not tell other nations what to do because we don't have such a great track record ourselves. We've meddled in other nations' internal affairs, and we have problems in our own country. Here again, Obama forgets that he has been president and that he has improperly intermeddled with other nations, especially our reliable ally Israel. And problems in our own country? I know this is news to the utopian left, but every nation is always going to have problems.

He particularly lamented our “growing inequality” and even blames it for our divisive politics and cynicism—two conditions to which he has been the greatest contributor for years. What’s that you said about hypocrisy, Mr. Obama?

But he gets the biggest prize for audaciously complaining about our political system, claiming that money is overwhelming ideas. Politicians are listening more to their wealthy contributors than to “ordinary people.”

Well, that may be true as far as it goes. We conservatives are tired of the ruling class and the establishment elite and their incestuous lobbyists, but we don’t believe that the left’s proposals of suppressing speech are the solution. And if anyone’s hands are dirty on this score, Obama’s are.

More importantly, Obama has no credibility in complaining about politicians who fail to listen to the American people—whether or not because of money. No one listens less to the people than he does. No one is more self-assured with less justification than he is. The American people are aghast at his arrogant refusal to defend America and listen to his advisers, his insistence on bringing terrorist-imbedded refugees and immigrants into this nation, his bizarre assertion that global warming is a greater threat to this nation than Islamic terrorism, his endless lies on Obamacare, his constant slandering of this country, and on and on.

It will be a sheer joy when we have a new president, God willing, who genuinely loves this nation and sees it as a force for good throughout the world and begins to return it to that path. No, this nation is not over, but it needs to turn back to its founding principles and believe in itself again.^{*7}

So i guess this picture applies again?

this is precisely why trump won because people are fucking tired of being called dumbfuckistan while being in a constant threat of being labelled "racist, idiot, misogynist" and so on when they try to defend themselves

you are the reason why people are fucking tired of your "better than thou" shit

you are why trump won

Obama's Plan Hatched at Columbia University

President Obama and I were college classmate at Columbia University, class of '83. I know all too well how mindlessly liberal the students and faculty of that institution can be, and Barack Obama is certainly no exception. My time at Columbia made it crystal clear: liberals always believe they are morally superior. While they publicly state that their mission is to save the world from prejudice, patriotism, racism, greed, and inequality, they are, in fact, hostile and resentful towards anyone who has achieved self-made success through American values. It is in this cesspool of intolerance that Obama and his Marxist cronies hatched a secret plan to destroy our country. They openly hated America—calling it racist. They hated capitalism—and vowed to bring “the system down...”

There are two things you need to know about Obama at Columbia University. First, he was Pre Law and a Political Science major—just like me. I thought I knew everyone studying Political Science during my four years at Columbia. Not Obama. I never met him, never saw him, never even heard of him. Strange. Same major, same career path, and graduated on the same day—where was he? Was he busy attending communist party meetings? No need to guess. In his autobiography he proudly admits attending Socialist Party meetings at Cooper Union in downtown Manhattan. He also admits publicly in his own book to not wanting to meet anyone at Columbia who wasn't black, Hispanic, gay, or a Marxist professor. His words. So it's possible he was so busy attending communist meetings and trying to avoid guys like me (white, straight, loved America) that our paths never crossed. Unlikely, but possible.

But, it's the second thing you really need to know about Obama at Columbia. He says he graduated Class of '83. Let's give him the benefit of the doubt. Well then Obama had to attend the same Political Science classes as me and I can tell you, almost to a man, my classmates in the Class of '83 proudly called themselves Marxist, communist or socialist. They bragged of being radical like a badge of honor.

In my class the typical Columbia political science student vowed to destroy capitalism, bankrupt business owners, and vaporize what they called “the white power structure.” For the most part these were spoiled brat white students of privilege and power. They were children of wealth, given everything on a silver platter and all they felt was anger and guilt. Their goal was to destroy their own fathers. They talked about it all day long. [This author's bold emphasis]

So let me tell you a story. Back in 1981 I was sitting in a political science class. The president at the time was Ronald Reagan, a man reviled by the left just as viciously as any Republican is today. Suddenly our lecture was interrupted by a door swinging open violently—whereupon a breathless fellow student raced into the room screaming, “The president has been shot! They've just assassinated President Reagan.”

Ronald Reagan was my hero. The news hit me like a ton of bricks. I instantly felt sick to my stomach, and tears flowed down my cheeks. But it was the response of the rest of the class that I will remember for the rest of my life. They cheered. They clapped, they yelled, they high-fived, and whooped in sheer unadulterated joy. My fellow classmates, the ones I was naively trying so hard to befriend despite their radical leftist views, were HAPPY that my hero President Ronald Reagan was dead (or so they thought). They were celebrating what they thought was the assassination of America's president.

Incidentally, if Obama actually went to Columbia, he'd almost certainly have to have been in that class leading the cheers. Feel like you need a shower yet? Lest you think I'm exaggerating, British leftists just celebrated and cheered upon hearing of the death of Margaret Thatcher only days ago.

But wait, the most frightening and eye-opening is still to come. You see political science students at Columbia were taught a detailed plan designed by two former Columbia professors named Cloward & Piven to bring down "the system," destroy capitalism, and turn America into a socialist state. We discussed it in class, wrote about it, and debated it outside class. It was our #1 topic for four years.

The plan was revolting, but brilliant. Cloward & Piven taught that America could only be destroyed from within. Only by overwhelming the system with debt, welfare, and entitlements could capitalism and the America economy be destroyed. So the plan was to make a majority of Americans dependent on welfare, food stamps, disability, unemployment, and entitlements of all kinds. Then, under the weight of the debt, the system would implode and the economy collapse, bankrupting business owners (i.e. conservative donors). Americans would be brought to their knees, begging for big government to save them. Voila—you'd have a new system—socialism!

Sound familiar?

Lo and behold, one of my classmates was elected as President and it's clear as a bell that he is using that plan to destroy America, capitalism, and the U.S. economy right in front of our eyes. It's the exact plan hatched at Columbia University in our college days. Exact in every way.

Under Obama, 660,000 Americans dropped off the job rolls...just last month. 90 million working-age, able-bodied Americans are no longer in the workforce. 90 million. The workforce participation rate is the lowest since 1979. For men it's the lowest since 1948 (when record keeping began).

Almost 50 million Americans are on food stamps (20% of all eligible adults). 14 million are on disability. Millions more are on welfare, unemployment, housing allowances, aid to dependent children, or 100 other free government programs. Now, add in free healthcare plus 22 million government employees. Record-setting numbers of Americans are emptying their retirement accounts to survive. Student loan debt is a national disaster- with defaults up 36% from a year ago. 16.4 million Americans live in poverty...in the suburbs. Every day under Obama the private sector shrinks, while the government grows like a toxic malignant tumor.

Obama promised to cut the deficit in half; instead he gave us five consecutive trillion dollar deficits. He promised to spend responsibly; instead he became the biggest spender in world history. He called Bush's $4 trillion in debt over 8 years reckless, then proceed to pile on $6 trillion in only 4 years. He swore to be on the side of small business, but he added 6,118 new rules, regulations and mandates in just the last 90 days. He claimed taxes are low, yet he just raised taxes to the same level as bankrupt EU countries like Greece, Spain, Italy and France. Our federal income taxes are now far higher than former Soviet Republics.

Folks, this is Cloward & Piven. This is Karl Marx, who despised the middle class and vowed to wipe it out. This is Saul Alinsky (Obama's mentor) who dedicated his book (Obama's favorite book) to Lucifer, the devil.

This is no accident, or the work of an economically inept liberal. This is a purposeful plan to drown the nation in debt and hook a majority to government handouts, happening in front of our eyes. It's crystal clear Obama's plan was hatched in our college days, at Columbia, Class of '83.

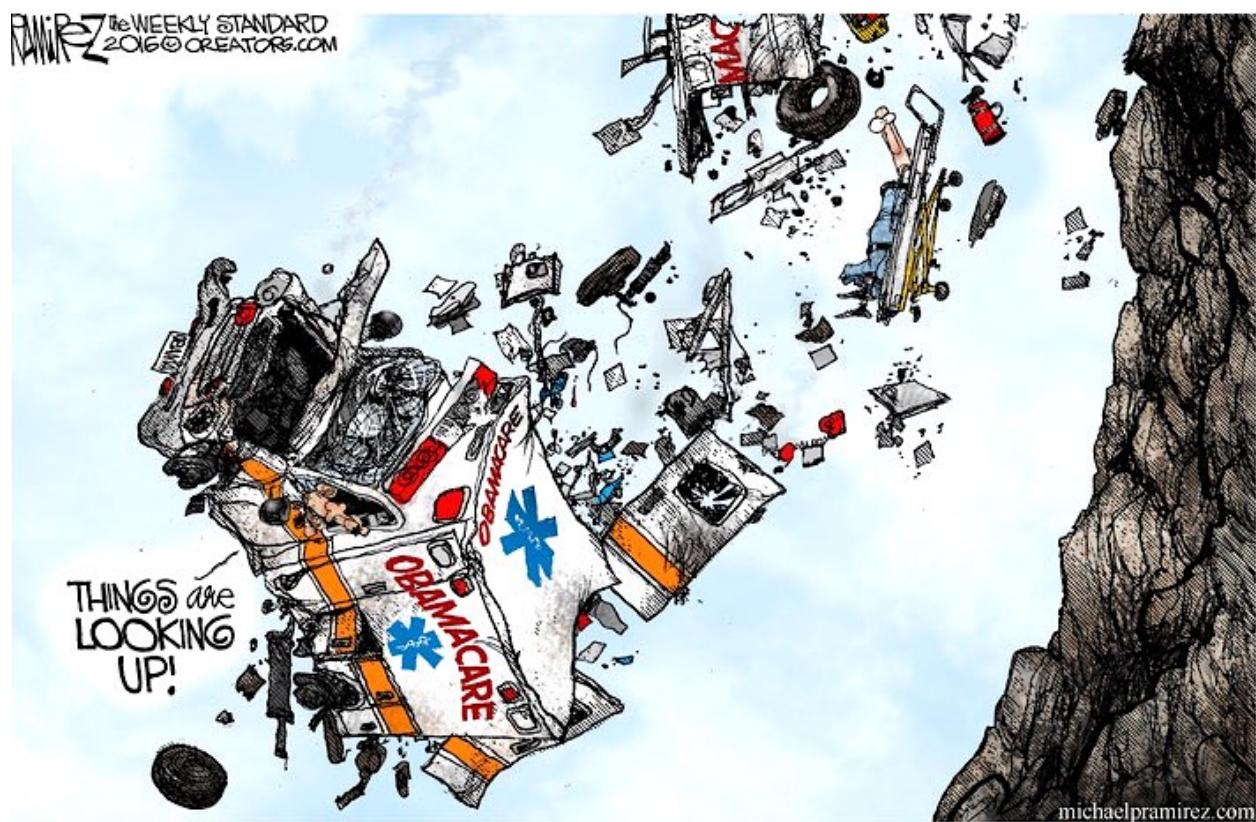

While I never met Obama at Columbia, I can certainly put him at the scene of the crime. He either went to Columbia, or he didn't. If he didn't, he's a fraud. If he did, he knew the Cloward & Piven plan like the back of his hand. He studied it and his goal—like almost all my classmates—was to use it to bring down the U.S. economy and destroy capitalism to create what they consider to be “equality, fairness and social justice.”

Why would anyone want to purposely collapse the economy you might ask? Saul Alinsky taught the ends justify the means. A bankrupt America wipes out the middle class and small business. That wipes out the majority of donors to conservatives causes—meaning Obama has no opposition. It creates “equality”—by putting everyone on equal footing (shared misery). It causes panic—and in panic, voters often make hasty decisions—like choosing big government to save them.

The destruction and devastation we see happening right now is classic Cloward & Piven. It's the plan we learned, studied, and discussed day and night at Columbia. This is no coincidence. This is the Marxist attack from within. This is a purposeful attempt to take down the economy, collapse the middle class, wipe out small business, bankrupt the wealthy (conservative donors), and addict the country to big government Nanny State socialism.

And it's working. Obama has been working on his plan for 30 years (our 30th Columbia class reunion is next month). Now it is time for us to get to work. As I explain in my brand new book... all success, all progress, all the miracles in this world are based on heart, on spirit, on will and on the power of being relentless. We are all going to need to muster the power of relentless to defeat Obama and his socialist game plan. We're going to need to overcome the damage Obama has done to our economy...and our children's future. It's time for battle. Go create your own Booming Personal Economy. Go protect your family. Go take back this country. Your mission is to survive, thrive, and prosper despite Obama.^{*9}

What Government ‘Help’ Looks Like on the Front Lines

Several times each year, our small California company that fluctuates between 100 to 110 employees is besieged by bureaucratic aliens. They show up unannounced, flash us their badges after beaming down from their mother ship, and then expect us to give them our immediate, unadulterated attention as if our lives revolved around them. This year alone we have had to entertain CAL-OSHA, the Dept. of Weights and Measures, the Board of Equalization, various sheriffs and law enforcement agents, and mandatory worker's comp auditors. Then there are mandatory reports that come unsolicited in the mail and must be completed, typically in 15 to 30 days; the Multiple Worksite Report every quarter; DOL time clock punch record audits; UI audits; nosy creditors and student loan repos; garnishments; the Form 5500 for the DOL; top-heavy testing for 401K; and the more uncommon but regularly occurring U.S. Census.

I'm just getting started.

We haven't even broached the complexity required for a corporate tax return. We are gearing up for that one, as we do every year, using the long four-month runway to compile all the usual paperwork requested by our accountant, who relies on the ornate nature of this government insanity to retain his own sense of relevance. I don't want to travel down this muddy yet familiar road of IRS humiliation. Over the last two decades, it has anesthetized my ability to even give a damn anymore. I'm numb.

So instead of going down that thrilling road, let's discuss the new one, as boring as all this other hellishness is, and this new one is particularly vile.

Last year was the first year of threatening employers with penalties, fines, and fees (also known as taxes, notwithstanding the Supreme Court), which caused us to scramble around like female leads in horror movies dragging their bodies along the ground, trying to avoid the hatchet man. We survived, kind of, because of phased in forbearance allowing us to dodge a bullet, but we still lost a lot of blood in the form of lost time.

This year was even worse. Most small businesses use third-party payroll software to track the ACA, as opposed to big companies that can afford custom in-house software. As the law has always been mutating due to the fluctuating illegal whims of the D.C. junta, the confused software has always been forced to second-guess these ongoing revisions. It's as if Freud himself vomited up the mucus-filled egos of these morally sick politicians, who think we were made to revolve around them as they laugh at everyone not in their Democratic Party country club.

In the last three weeks alone, two of my highest compensated employees spent their time going over every 1095C before it goes into paper form and is mailed out. For each employee, there are three stacks of cells for every month, 36 boxes that must be filled in correctly, using over a dozen different codes. I'm not even in my business anymore. I work for the government, against my will, along with two of my employees. The three of us cannot afford to make one mistake in any of the cells for all 100 employees. Thirty-six hundred codes must be checked and verified before certification. That requires us to go over our electronic paperwork and refer back to it. These papers, along with our lovely new 1094, which goes directly to the IRS, form the leash around both our necks as well as the necks of our employees, because they will be liable too for fines based on the correct information we provide to them personally. It is a hideous amount of time suck.

And that is just the end-of-year 1095s. I haven't gotten into other aspects of this perverse law, such as the affordability as well as the full- versus part-time ongoing monitoring of all staff that keeps us spastically hypervigilant, not to mention exhausted from trying to avoid fines by having constant discussions with employees nearing 30 hours. I'm dating myself here, but it's like Logan's Run. If you hit 30, you die.

Now we have higher churn, less loyalty among staff, less full time, poorer training and less job satisfaction, and all for what? To pretend that Obama was some great man when he's been the exact opposite? This is a man who never intended to appreciate, or pretend to, even for a minute, the effect this perverse control had over other lives. He just flat-out ignored it, and caused bona fide suffering as well as lost productivity. He doesn't have a legacy worth defending.

Thankfully, we are done. We are tired. Our business could not continue this charade. And while its difficult still, as California has uniquely chosen to signal off the White House with a non-staggered pincer formation (minimum wages to $15, paid sick leave mandates, etc.), at least Obamacare can die. Maybe California will choose to be just as ideologically reactionary as Obama's easily bruised, frangible nature and cram down a state Romneycare onto the entire coast, which would not be entirely surprising, as it would be a spiteful thumb in Trump's eye. And it would mean we would have to finally vacate the state once and for all.^{*10}

POLITICIANS

Pathological corporate puppets masquerading as public servants.

Elected by the brainwashed ignorant, serving the global banking cartel through debt-based, privatized, completely fraudulent Centralized Banking, controlled by hereditary psychopaths hell-bent on controlling everything, no matter how many lies need to be told through the corporate media, innocent people need to be murdered, or ecosystems need to be irreversably destroyed.

The 14th Amendment. Congressional Fraud!

Congress has acted deliberately, with the intent to deceive and defraud the American people. However, today, continuing to ignore these crimes, amounts to treason! ... From the Unanimous Declaration Of Independence:

"The history of the present King of Great Britain is a history of repeated injuries and usurpations, all having in direct object the establishment of an absolute Tyranny over these states."

As fellow Americans I ask you to consider...

Is there any doubt as to the design of the attack on the American people? Out of ignorance, an overabundance of trust, and a susceptibility to being naive, over 600,000 Americans dedicated their lives to principles for which they thought worth dying. Knowing of the treachery behind these events causes me to grieve for such a great loss of lives based upon deception, lies and deceit.

We are no longer the ignorant and the naive. We are no longer the trusting and the susceptible.

That period of trial by fire and death is over. We as sovereign Americans have a greater knowledge and respect for the responsibility and sacred obligations we have towards each other.

We are in a position, where we as the people, can extend to individual members of Congress the opportunity to begin to make amends. The Congress has the ability to act and lawfully return America to the de jure state from which our liberty was stolen.

However, failing to act accordingly will quickly establish the ethical and moral standards by which the members of Congress will be judged. By the fruit of their deeds in this matter, we the people, will come to know them close up and very, very personal.

The evidence of a comprehensive plan to conquer the American people.

There is nothing left to do except prosecute any public servants who fail to support and defend the Constitution of the United States of America.

Any public servant who violates his oath of office commits perjury, insurrection and rebellion against the law of the land...the Constitution of the United States of America as commonly accepted by most Americans.

Americans...this is a no brainer...Now please get in there and do not accept anything but an immediate and complete solution.

This is one of those issues about which Rodger makes clear! We the people must all resolve to force all public servants to successfully address this crime before they are paid one more dime from the treasury of the people.

You see dear patriots, with no proper credentials, no public servant can be paid. That means all public servants must be complaint to the Constitution to get paid.

They must be honoring their oath. Have the proper bond and be certified to hold public office. Those who have violated their oath of office have committed perjury, insurrection and rebellion against the supreme law of the land...the Constitution. These are all felonies and severe penalties will apply. Penalties, including immediate removal from office, prosecution, possible incarceration and being prohibited from ever holding public office in the future.

Plus, if the public servants has not been lawfully seated and impersonated a public servant, in addition to the items mentioned above, they may be required to repay all money and benefits received to the public treasury, while they were taking payment under false pretenses... ^{*12}

Ex-CNN Anchor, and Her Husband, are Alive Thanks to a Gun

Lynne Russell and her husband, Chuck de Caro, believe they would be dead if she hadn't been carrying a gun. Late Wednesday night, Russell was forced at gunpoint from a motel parking lot into her room. The robber, not satisfied with merely taking her husband's briefcase, started shooting at him. Fortunately, Russell had handed de Caro her purse, with her handgun inside it. De Caro shot the attacker, who later died at the hospital.

This story made national news. ABC News, NBC News, Fox News, People Magazine and even such foreign publications as the UK Guardian newspaper mentioned that Russell, a CNN anchor from 1983 to 2001, and de Caro both had concealed handgun permits.

We see these stories every day, some of the heroic actions caught on video and others where the criminal is killed, but you would never know it, because the national media continually ignore them. The case with Russell is an exception because she is a public figure.

To illustrate how common such defense is, consider a few other cases that occurred over the last week where permitted concealed handguns stopped crimes:

- Miami, June 24: A pizza driver was in a parking lot walking to his car at 1 a.m. when two robbers opened fire on him, putting holes in his car windows. The deliveryman killed one robber and wounded the other.
- Evansville, IN, June 29: Two men looking for a fight confronted a man, Erick Paula, on a remote country road at 3:30 a.m. Paula fired his gun when the men approached him, wounding both of them.
- Clearwater Beach, Fla., June 29: An Uber driver, a former New York City police officer, was being choked by a passenger. The driver pulled out his gun and shot the passenger in the foot, wounding him.
- Baton Rouge, La., June 29: A robber walked up to a man and asked if he could borrow a lighter. As the man reached into his pocket, the robber drew his gun and demanded his possessions. The victim had a permitted concealed handgun in his pocket and shot the attacker.
- Albuquerque, N.M., June 30: A robber had just held up a business before attacking a pizza delivery driver. The driver, a concealed handgun permit holder, shot and critically wounded the robber.
- Springfield, Mo., June 30: A car owner used his gun to stop a carjacking. The man wounded the criminal, who was captured a few blocks away.

These cases didn't make national news. Often they got only one local news story. But to get even local news coverage, someone almost always has to be shot.

A recent report from the Violence Policy Center falsely claimed that defensive gun use is extremely rare, with only 258 justifiable homicides with guns in 2012, as opposed to 8,342 criminal homicides. The report received major media attention in such places as the New York Times, the Los Angeles Times and the Washington Post.

It is an old assertion, but there is no support for it. The justifiable homicide number is a useless statistic. Very few police departments record them, and those that do rarely do so in a systematic way. But more importantly, well less than one percent of defensive gun uses involve the attacker being killed or wounded.

Finally, if their claim were right, banning guns would lower murder rates. After all, you would lose only a few defensive gun uses compared to all the murders committed with guns. But, in fact, every single time that guns have been banned, whether in cities or in entire nations, murder rates go up. Gun bans primarily take guns away from law-abiding citizens.

Thank goodness Lynne Russell and Chuck de Caro were able to defend themselves. But Americans would be better informed if it weren't just the cases involving celebrities who defend themselves that got news coverage. ^{*13}

Steven Spielberg made a movie about a culturally rich, scientifically advanced progressive socialist nation where only the police and the military had guns. Everything that modern liberals love.

^{*14}

"They may call it progressivism, dress it up with pseudo-science and pretenses to rational thought, perfume it with duplicitous calls for 'freedom' and 'equality,' but deep in their lizard brains is an ancient love of power, their seduction by Satan's lie that we can be as gods." —Author unknown

Buddha Seems to Bring Tranquility to Oakland Neighborhood

Dan Stevenson is neither a Buddhist nor a follower of any organized religion.

The 11th Avenue resident in Oakland's Eastlake neighborhood was simply feeling hopeful in 2009 when he went to an Ace hardware store, purchased a 2-foot-high stone Buddha and installed it on a median strip in a residential area at 11th Avenue and 19th Street.

He hoped that just maybe his small gesture would bring tranquillity to a neighborhood marred by crime: dumping, graffiti, drug dealing, prostitution, robberies, aggravated assault and burglaries.

What happened next was nothing short of stunning. Area residents began to leave offerings at the base of the Buddha: flowers, food, candles. A group of Vietnamese women in prayer robes began to gather at the statue to pray.

And the neighborhood changed. People stopped dumping garbage. They stopped vandalizing walls with graffiti. And the drug dealers stopped using that area to deal. The prostitutes went away.

I asked police to check their crime statistics for the block radius around the statue, and here's what they found: Since 2012, when worshipers began showing up for daily prayers, overall year-to-date crime has dropped by 82 percent. Robbery reports went from 14 to three, aggravated assaults from five to zero, burglaries from eight to four, narcotics from three to none, and prostitution from three to none.

"I can't say what to attribute it to, but these are the numbers," a police statistician told me.

Back in 2009, when word got around that Stevenson was the person who'd installed the statue, offerings began to appear on his doorstep. It was like a scene straight out of the Clint Eastwood film "Gran Torino."

"They left a ton of fruit and Vietnamese specialty foods and candy, but there's only me and my wife, Lu, here and we can't eat all that stuff—but it's so good," said Stevenson.

"I've tried to explain to them my reasons" for placing the statue, he said. "I have nothing against it, but I don't believe what you believe!"

I don't think it matters to them.

To this day, every morning at 7, worshipers ring a chime, clang a bell and play soft music as they chant morning prayers. The original statue is now part of an elaborate shrine that includes a wooden structure standing 10 feet tall and holding religious statues, portraits, food and fruit offerings surrounded by incense-scented air.

"This used to be a huge spot for dumping stuff," said Alicia Tatum, 27, on an early morning walk with her dogs Lulu and Mya. "But over time, it's blossomed with more and more and more flowers—and they are out there every morning like clockwork."

On weekends, the worshipers include more than a dozen people: black folks, white folks, all folks, said Andy Blackwood, a neighborhood resident. Two weeks ago, a group of German tourists visited the shrine.

"The dope-dealing has stopped, the ladies of the evening have stopped," Blackwood said.

The Buddha has withstood two attempts to remove him from his perch, one criminal and one governmental. Neither has worked.

Soon after its installation, a would-be thief tried to pry the statue from its perch, but Stevenson had secured him with reinforced iron bar and "$35 worth" of a powerful epoxy—and Buddha didn't budge.

In 2012, after a resident's complaint, the city's Public Works Department tried to remove the statue but received such passionate blowback from neighbors that city officials decided to table and "study" the issue. Two years later, the administrative effort is long forgotten, and Buddha is still there.

When I went to visit the shrine, four small-framed ladies who don't speak or understand English decided I looked like a convert.

The moment I started talking, one of them politely took my pen from one hand, my notepad from the other and directed me to clasp my hands together, bow and repeat after her—so I did. When in Rome, right?

Apparently, my Buddhist chants aren't half bad either because they won some approving "oohs and aahs" from the flock—and carried me to Step 2 in the conversion process. The same woman who had grabbed my gear sat me cross-legged on a prayer rug in the street and placed a stool with a book on it before me. If nothing else, Buddha and I share the same body type—short, squat and happy. I sat there for a moment thinking that I might resemble him—and maybe that's why they seemed to like me.

I thought it might be a good opportunity to get a question in, too—and this time my spiritual guide seemed to understand.

"Next week," she replied.

Thank you very much, but I think I've already found what I was looking for.^{*15}

America is like a healthy body and its resistance is threefold: its patriotism, its morality and its spiritual life. If we can undermine these three areas, America will collapse from within.

“We’re Going to Have to Change How the Media Reports”

For going on seven years we have learned three things about President Obama:

- 1) He loves the poor so much he continues to create more of them.
- 2) He loves the poor so much he does everything in his power to keep them poor.
- 3) He doesn’t see the opposition as loyal, but as bad players—his enemy. This is especially true of Fox News, which Obama ripped as anti-poor bigots during a Wednesday afternoon summit on poverty.

We’re used to this Obama, the forever-partisan who has never seen himself as president of all the people but only of those who worship him.

What was most revealing about the president’s comments was his expressed desire to “change how the media reports.”

Speaking of Fox News, the poor, and the way GOP leaders think, Obama said, [W]e’re going to have to change how our body politic thinks, which means we’re going to have to change how the media reports on these issues.”

Here is the full transcript:

I think that the effort to suggest that the poor are sponges, leeches, don't want to work, are lazy, are undeserving, got traction. And look, it's still being propagated. I have to say that if you watch Fox News on a regular basis, it is a constant venue. They will find folks who make me mad. I don't know where they find them. They're all like, "I don't want to work. I just want a free Obama Phone, or whatever." And that becomes an entire narrative that gets worked up. And very rarely do you hear an interview of a waitress, which is much more typical—who is raising a couple of kids and doing everything right but still can't pay the bills.

And so, if we're going to change how John Boehner and Mitch McConnell think, we're going to have to change how our body politic thinks, which means we're going to have to change how the media reports on these issues, and how people's impressions of what it's like to struggle in this economy looks like. And how budgets connect to that. And that's a hard process because that requires a much broader conversation than typically we have on the nightly news.

After seven failed years, to watch Obama sit there and discuss the poor as though he is part of the solution and not the problem, is laughable...

The closest Obama has ever come to experiencing anything close to poverty was during his time as a community organizer in Chicago. And in that dynamic, the poor were just pawns for Obama to manipulate to achieve his political ambitions.

Obama knows nothing of struggle, or what life is like for those who do. And after 7 years of his failed economic policies, we also know he doesn’t give a damn enough about the poor to change his policies in a way that might actually help them... Obama likes poor people fine—he likes them dependent on the government.

He also likes the news media to do what it’s told. ^{*16}

Store Owner Still Fighting IRS After Feds Seized His $107G...

Note: This story from 2015 vanished from the Fox News website. Was Fox News asked to 'make it disappear'?

When federal agents stormed into Lyndon McLellan's North Carolina convenience store last October without warning and accused him of trying to put one over on the government, the small business owner wasn't sure what was happening.

"They asked me if I knew what 'structuring' was and then they showed me some cash deposits I made in a 24-hour period," he told FoxNews.com.

The IRS agents apparently were suspicious because of deposits McLellan had made of just under $10,000. Banks are required to report transactions over $10,000; making multiple deposits of less than $10,000 to evade that requirement is known as "structuring."

Under this pretense, enforcement agents accused McLellan of the con and seized all $107,000 from his bank account. "It leaves you numb," McLellan told FoxNews.com. "I was in a state of shock."

McLellan is one of many business owners who have been caught up in a controversial federal practice known as civil forfeiture. Under this policy, federal agents have been able to seize the property and bank accounts of anyone they suspect of having criminal ties. The burden of proof falls on the owner even if no charges are filed.

What's unique in McLellan's case is that he's still battling to get his money back, despite the IRS pledging late last year to pull back on its use of civil forfeiture—and despite even the IRS commissioner suggesting agents erred in locking down his money.

Before the federal seizure last year, McLellan had spent more than a decade running L&M Convenience Mart, a gas station, restaurant and convenience store in Fairmont, N.C.

In an instant, his business account was gone. And then it got worse.

Rumors quickly spread in the tiny town that McLellan's money was frozen because of suspected ties to drugs, fraying the good reputation he'd spent years building in the community.

"Several people thought it was drug-related but when I told them what really happened they said, 'How in the world can they take your money?' That's the answer I've been waiting on too," he said.

McLellan claims he didn't do anything wrong. The IRS has never alleged he committed a crime nor has the agency brought any criminal charges against him. Instead, McLellan, 50, was verbally accused of structuring cash deposits to avoid bank reporting requirements, under a measure originally meant to target drug dealers, terrorists and others trying to launder money through criminal activity.

From 2005 to 2012, the IRS seized more than $242 million from alleged structuring violations in more than 2,500 cases, according to an Institute for Justice study. In more than 830 of those cases, no other criminal activity was alleged.

In many civil forfeiture cases, the government will make a deal with the owner where he or she will agree to turn over half their money seized in order to get a lengthy and costly legal fight to go away. But the practice has come under intense congressional and media scrutiny.

Under pressure, the IRS last October said it would no longer go after structuring cases unless the money in question could be tied to some other illegal activity. The DOJ changed its policy in March. The problem, though, is that the new policy isn't retroactive, meaning McLellan might still have to pay up.

"It doesn't seem right," he said. "I'm 50 years old. In 13 or 14 more years, are they going to be doing the same thing to me?"

Robert Johnson, a lawyer with the Institute for Justice which represents McLellan, told FoxNews.com that the policy changes from the IRS are a "positive development" but says what's needed is binding reform from Congress.

"There have been a number of cases where the IRS has continued to apply structuring laws despite the new policy," Johnson said, adding that his group has recently litigated two in Michigan and one in Iowa.

At a February 2015 hearing before the U.S. House of Representatives Ways and Means Oversight Subcommittee, Rep. George Holding, R-N.C., mentioned to IRS Commissioner John Koskinen that he had reviewed McLellan's case —though he did not specifically name it.

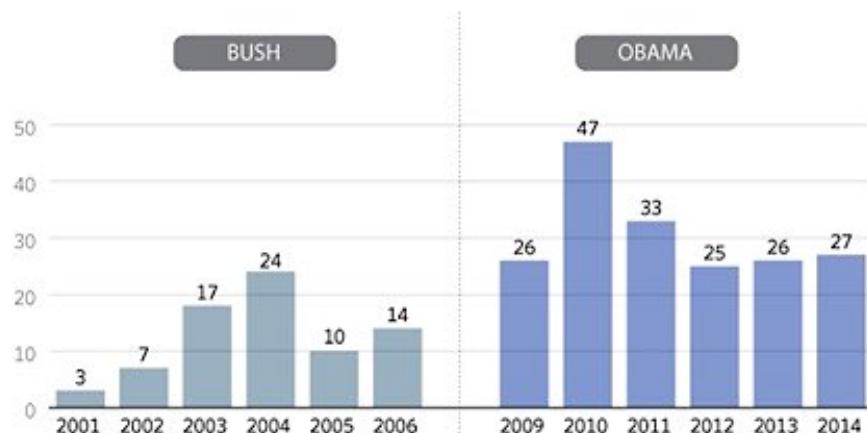

"If that case exists, then it's not following in the policy I've been advised," Koskinen testified, adding that he had "lengthy meetings with the senior leadership" of the IRS's criminal investigation division and was assured that employees were trained in and advised about the new policy.

But that seems to be news to small business owners who, like McLellan, say the government still is holding their bank balances hostage.

"If I've done wrong, penalize me, but you don't have to take everything a person's got," said McLellan, who still has not seen a dime of the $107,000 the government seized... ^{*17}

Obama Issues Twice as Many Major New Rules as Bush

In its first six years, the Obama Administration imposed 184 major regulations on the private sector. That figure is more than twice the number imposed by the Bush Administration in its first six years.

Obama's Post-Presidency Shakedown Cruise

Hey, if shakedowns work for Al Sharpton, why not try it on a grander scale befitting a former president?

As has been reported (though not by MSNBC), Al Sharpton has made millions shaking down corporations by intimating that he will charge them with racism if they do not pay him off...

He, of course, is a tax deadbeat whose records are for some reason kept on very flammable material, since they always seem to go up in smoke.

Sharpton was just following a successful scam pioneered by Jesse Jackson...

One can expect to see more of the same—albeit in a more refined, less blunt way—led by the president Obama after he leaves office.

Krissah Thompson of the Washington Post reports on the president's plan for the future:

Like their recent predecessors, the Obamas are quietly devoting some of their final months in the White House to laying the groundwork for a very busy life after it: a free-form career that is expected to be very public, very active and—owing to their relative youth—very long. [snip]

"I'll go back to doing the kinds of work that I was doing before—just trying to find ways to help people, help young people get educations, help people get jobs, help bring businesses into neighborhoods that don't have enough businesses," Obama recently told a group of middle school students. "That's the kind of work that I really love to do." [snip]

The president recently announced that My Brother's Keeper, the White House program he established to help young men of color, will form an independent nonprofit organization that will raise money from corporations.

He actually has a ready-made list of people who will eagerly donate to his new efforts—in many cases (such as Comcast, the cable-opoly that owns the nation's largest cable network, MSNBC, Universal, etc.), they overlap with those companies that have supported Sharpton... But his efforts will of course make Sharpton's look amateurish.

The Obama efforts will challenge the Clinton Foundation as a source of personal wealth for the Obama family and will have the added benefit of being able to accumulate many millions from foreign sources. The Obamas can do this with little shame or consequence since, as Obama is wont to inform us, he will not be on the ballot anywhere ever again.

But an enriched foundation will be a springboard for his desire to continue to work his best to fundamentally transform America. Indeed, as I have suggested before in "Obama's Grand Plan," his strategy will be to form a coalition of like-minded people (certainly African-Americans and Latinos will be a core focus—that explains his many actions to shower benefits on them during his presidency).

He will use his followers to intimidate corporations and politicians to do his bidding. He is a young man whose great desire is to "fundamentally transform America." He will not be done with us after he leaves office.^{*18}

Real Men Don't 'Shut Up'—But They Do 'Step Up'

I am a woman who is beyond sickened by the current radical feminist platform. "I am woman, hear me roar" has mutated into screeching, man-hating, eternal victimhood.

The Democrats that support, condone, and feed this frenzy need to be stopped at the voting booth this November. Because I am a woman who believes in the virtues of masculinity, a woman who will go to the ends of the earth to ensure that her sons have a future, I feel compelled to address men in particular.

Men, it should bother you deeply that you have been told to "shut up."

It should be of grave concern to you that feminists spew nonsense that all of you are would-be rapists.

You should be horrified that when Democrats "questioned" Brett Kavanaugh, they were actually accusing him of being a drunken teenage serial rapist. They demonstrated complete disregard for the presumption of innocence that is the bedrock of our great country's justice system.

You should be infuriated that after a man responded to vile personal abuse with righteous indignation, Democrats claimed that proved he lacks the character and the temperament to continue a job in which he has excelled since 2006.

Men, your choices are clear: You can be the man who thinks, in the face of vile allegations that would destroy your entire life, that a vehement defense is appropriate and justified. Or you can be the man who thinks, as the Democrats do, that the only acceptable response to character assassination is that of dispassionate composure—and anything otherwise proves you are somehow incapable of professional integrity.

Before you decide, consider this: What would you think about a man who, when accused of being a serial sexual abuser, portrays detached composure? What would you think about a man whose entire family is about to be destroyed, yet he shows no passionate attempt to defend or protect them? What would you think about a man who would remain silent rather than demand unbiased pursuit of truth and justice? Would you not think of this man as cold, calculating, even heartless in the face of accusations of sexual violence?

Make no mistake, that's how the Democrats would have depicted Judge Kavanaugh had he responded with such a phlegmatic and unmoved disposition. But instead, he responded as any real man would and should respond—and Democrats didn't approve.

To you men of logic: There should be no question in your mind that the Democrats' last-ditch effort to stop a nomination had nothing to do with actual sexual abuse. These people do not care about the actual victims of sexual abuse. You know you just witnessed a despicable example of how easy it is to use an allegation of sexual assault to destroy a man. You saw proof that Democrats will flagrantly deny the presumption of a man's innocence—for starters—in order to attain political power. Your eyes are wide open to the aftermath of their fiasco: Democrats succeeded in riling up emotions and spawning violent chaos. Angry people try in vain to beat down the doors of the Supreme Court, mobs scream that belief overrides proof, individuals physically assault those who don't agree with their opinions—and real men should be ready to put a halt to this tyranny.

To you undecided men: Think more deeply about the reality of your own lives. You are in jobs and careers, work that may be your lifelong vocation. You are providers. Put yourself in the actual situation that Kavanaugh just endured, and consider what he faced: Successful career—destroyed. Family—destroyed. Decades of hard work, prudence, integrity, fine character—destroyed, destroyed, destroyed, destroyed. Make no mistake about it. Destroyed.

Tell me, would you sit unmoved in the face of destruction? No righteous indignation? No deeply ingrained masculine virtue calling you to protect and defend your beautiful family? Your future?

If so, shame on you! God forbid that anyone or anything you love might ever rely upon you for protection or defense.

To you men who remain loyal to the Democrats: You are stranded in far-left field, your team has left the game, and you are now playing ball with the radicals who hijacked your party. While fly balls pelt you and your entire team, all you do is duck and cover—it's as if you actually condone and embrace a passive form of genital-tucking.

You lack courage. You have become prisoners of emotion. You stand among the ranks of women whose agenda is rooted in the suspicion and fundamental hatred of masculinity. Your choice of “woman” is represented by a bullying, angry mob of Screaming-Mimi eternal victims. You have chosen poorly. You have been inducted into a culture of castration, and apparently, you are thoroughly pussyhat-whipped.

To that semblance of man: No woman takes you seriously. Certainly not any woman from among the ranks you've joined; and definitely none of the rest of us intelligent, reasonable, and logical women who stand in direct opposition to the hysterical feminists who detest men and their masculinity.

Only one group of women actually respects and enjoys real men, and it's not that angry mob on the Left. Real women are mourning the fact that real men have been made the enemy. We are devastated that some of you believe that you really should “shut up.” We oppose the vile feminist “resistance,” and we have no fear of true masculinity. We have the courage, the resolve, the integrity to stand side-by-side with real men, and oppose a radical platform of hate that will destroy our husbands, our brothers, our sons.

Men are not stupid. Men are not monsters. Men are not all rapists. Men are not all capable of becoming rapists. But, oh, how easy it is to depict you that way! We have witnessed this reality, and it could become every man's reality unless you stand up and fight.

In case some of you men still don't get it, and are still willing to try to sit at the table with these Democrats, pay attention. They play dirty poker. They have shown their hand repeatedly, yet somehow you think you have the odds in your favor. I am revealing the face value of the cards they hold. They decided to play with a feminist deck, and are holding all the cards depicting castrated kings. Why are you still in? *¹⁹

Antifa Arsonists Vandalize Pro-Trump Truck, THEN TORCH IT

A man in Vancouver, WA, just north of Portland returned to the bar he had left his truck at the night before to find charred remains of what used to be his Nissan Titan. On the previous night, Johnny MacKay opted to take an UBER home rather than take to the roads under the influence. He left his truck in the parking lot, expecting to drive it back the next day. Except some anti-Trump terrorists got it to first, setting it on fire... KPTV reports:

A self-proclaimed supporter of Donald Trump says his pickup was vandalized and set ablaze because of two bumper stickers that endorsed the president.

MacKay says he had been at the bar drinking the night before and decided to take an Uber home, leaving his truck overnight.

"I was coming by this morning just to check it on my way to work and it was gone," MacKay said.

The burnt truck had severe fire damage, most notably near the engine and within its interior. Its door were charred and the seats were melted...

"It's crazy," MacKay said. "You watch the news, you see this stuff on television, you see the protests and the damage and stuff, you never think it's going to happen to you..."

*"To destroy somebody else's property, just because you don't like how they think or because they have a difference of opinion—it's absurd," MacKay said... ^{20}

God Was the First Anti Semite

The first anti Semite was God himself.

When Moses told him the Jews were worshiping a golden calf, "The LORD said to Moses, "I have seen this people, and behold, they are an obstinate people. "Now then let Me alone, that My anger may burn against them and that I may destroy them..." (Exodus 32: 9-10)

I'm not sure what Abe Foxman would say about God's genocidal tendencies. In any case, the Baal worshipers are now in charge. God would face a Human Rights Tribunal for his rash statements.

In the meantime, they have evicted Him from His own Creation, and banished the word "God" from polite society.

The great prophets of the Old Testament were also antisemites who also would be hauled up in front of human rights tribunals. Jeremiah said Jews "will not speak the truth; they have taught their tongue to speak lies..." (Jeremiah 9:5). Isaiah says the lord will smite "the daughters of Zion [who] are haughty, and walk with stretched forth necks and wanton eyes..." (Isaiah 3:16)

Jesus joined the noble ranks of antisemites when he told the Pharisees, "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do. He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own: for he is a liar, and the father of it." (John 8:44)

Ye serpents, ye generation of vipers, how can ye escape the damnation of hell? (Matthew 23-33)

O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings, and ye would not! (Matthew 23:37)

The NWO is their revenge against God and Jesus.

Satan's Little Helpers?

Throughout history, Jews were criticized by a Who's Who of Western civilization who might face "hate crime" charges today.

The Roman historian Tacitus condemned them for subverting religion, country and family and said they were "enemies of all races but their own." George Bernard Shaw said, "The Jews had better stop being Jews and start being human beings."

The Hungarian musician Franz Liszt said, "They sell ...the crowbars and the projectiles that destroy the foundations of faith and morals."

The great German poet, Goethe said, "This crafty race has one great principle; as long as order prevails, there is nothing to be gained."

Voltaire, the French philosopher, said, "The Jewish nation dares to display an irreconcilable hatred toward all nations, and revolts against all masters; always superstitious, always greedy for the well-being enjoyed by others, always barbarous—cringing in misfortune and insolent in prosperity."

Jews are not taught about the supremacist agenda of their cabalist leaders. Instead, they are told they are "hated for no reason" or because people need an innocent scapegoat to blame for their suffering. Anti Semitism is an "irrational sickness in the mind of the Gentile." Increasingly in the satanist New World Order, the sane are labeled sick.

It's about time Jews realize that Judaism is not on the side of the angels, but it's not too late to get out.

It's time Christians realize that they have been had by the world's greatest tricksters. The Jews are not "the chosen people." Most don't even believe in God. Their leaders believe in Satan. They are megalomaniacs that destroy nations, kill millions and threaten the future of humanity.

It's time for all of us to realize that being able to criticize Jews is a litmus test of our freedom. Anti Semitism was banned and severely punished in Soviet Russia. Is that the kind of society we want? It's time to stop cringing at the charge of "anti Semite" and accept it as a compliment, a sign of courage and rectitude. It's time to call anti Semitism by its real name, Anti-Satanism.

Measures of their Success

The political, economic and cultural conquest of the world by cabalist Jews and their allies is the true history of the last 500 years or more. (The Illuminati bankers are behind imperialism.) Yet their control of culture is such that people are totally unaware that any conquest has even taken place. "Anti Semite" is a curse that instills paralysis.

If you're not an anti Semite, in the sense of opposing the satanic agenda of organized Jewry, you are an opportunist or dupe, or worse.

People are unaware that all wars were contrived by the Masonic Jewish bankers to increase their power and wealth, destroy their rivals and advance their scheme of world-government.

People are unaware that their "leaders" are puppets and the mass media are prostitutes. They are unaware that the Illuminati have sponsored feminism, homosexuality, promiscuity and pornography, and now transgenderism, to shred the social fabric (marriage and family) and undermine resistance. They are unaware that 9-11 etc were false flags used to rob us of our civil rights and they continue to stage fake terror to confiscate our weapons.

An ethnic Jew, the son of holocaust survivors who lost their parents, I recognize there are just causes for anti Semitism past and present. I represent those ordinary Jews who have been duped like the goyim. We refuse to be human shields, human sacrifices and scapegoats for organized Jewry's demented, satanic, no-longer-hidden agenda. ^{*21}

Grateful Dead Fans Replace VW Vans With Jets and the Ritz...

Twenty-seven years ago, Adam Cott and a bunch of his buddies climbed into his 1974 white Opel station wagon, which he had bought from a friend of his father's for $100, and drove from New Rochelle to Saratoga Springs, N.Y., to take in a Grateful Dead show.

They drove very slowly the whole way, in part because the car had a hole in the floor. But at least it provided a place to sleep.

Now Mr. Cott is 45, a father and entrepreneur. When he, his wife and his old crew (and their wives) head to Chicago this Fourth of July weekend to see the shows the Grateful Dead are scheduled to perform there, the accommodations will be different.

Instead of sleeping in an old car, his group will crash at the Peninsula hotel. And instead of driving in an old car, or driving at all, the group will be flying in an eight-seat private jet, at a rate of about $4,000 an hour. Their ticket packages cost almost as much, and include V.I.P. access and stadium perks.

Mr. Cott said that he decided to splurge on the plane because it would make it easier to convince his wife that a vacation to Chicago to see the Dead, rather than visiting the Caribbean or Europe, was a good idea. "At this stage of my life, I'm enjoying the fruits of my labor," he said. "We're certainly not roughing it as we did."

It was this past January that the Grateful Dead, whose frontman, Jerry Garcia, who died in 1995, announced that they would reconvene to perform their last shows ever, with a three-night "Fare Thee Well" engagement at Soldier Field, where Mr. Garcia played his final show. The band members Phil Lesh, Bob Weir, Mickey Hart and Bill Kreutzmann are to be joined, in Mr. Garcia's stead, by Trey Anastasio of Phish, as well as Bruce Hornsby and Jeff Chimenti.

Many of their fans, notorious for their devotion to the band, are among the last group of music lovers to follow the Dead on their tours in the 1980s and '90s.

Then mostly college students, they are now in their 40s and 50s, some with large disposable incomes. Which will make the cost of admission to this summer's shows less painful.

"This is in an incredibly high-demand event," said Jesse Lawrence, the founder and chief executive of TiqIQ, a ticket market search engine. According to recent TiqIQ data (the secondary ticket market fluctuates), the average ticket price for a "Fare Thee Well" show in Chicago is $938, in some cases triple that of other high-profile summer concert tours (the average for Madonna, according to TiqIQ, is $334; Taylor Swift, $310; the Rolling Stones, $298).

"The Dead, they are pretty amazing businesspeople, actually," Mr. Lawrence said. "The merchandising, licensing, archiving: They've monetized that brand 10 ways to Sunday."

At least one customer is rationalizing the spending as the price of returning to innocence. "I am willing to pay—a lot, if I have to—to be transported back to a time when things weren't so complicated and I was young and things were easy and people weren't so snarky," said Jonathan Weber, 43, a lawyer in Chicago who went to nearly 100 shows as a young student and plans to attend all three shows over the Fourth of July weekend, at a total cost of about $4,000.

The 2015 version of the Grateful Dead is almost certain to be as much about today as yesterday, more hashtags than hash, less Summer of Love than summer of “likes.”

The fancy hotels are nearly sold out. (The Ritz-Carlton, with a minimum stay of four nights and a rate of $625 a night for a lake-view king room, has a few bookings left.)

Kenny Dichter, the chief executive of Wheels Up, the private aviation company from which Mr. Cott booked his plane, said he is lining up additional Chicago-bound planes. “Ride-sharing, in the old days, was everyone hopping in the VW bus to see Jerry,” Mr. Dichter said. “Now it’s about getting a seat on a King Air 350i.”

SoulCycle, the indoor-cycle chain, plans to offer “Dead Rides” in Chicago.

Much of this, of course, is just wavy gravy to the music beloved by fans who deluged a post office in Stinson Beach, Calif., with mail-order ticket applications—a nod to how the band traditionally sold some tickets. (People later jammed the Ticketmaster website in the first minutes that about 50,000 additional tickets per show, at $59.50 to $199.50, were made available. Luxury packages with hotel rooms and drinks were also snapped up.)

Thousands of tickets then quickly showed up on secondary markets, with some people paying $1,000 for a not-great seat.

By the spring, the band announced it would play two shows in Santa Clara, Calif., a week before the final shows in Chicago. Those tickets sold out quickly as well, but demand on the secondary market is lower than that for Chicago tickets.

“We could have sold a million tickets,” said Peter Shapiro, 42, the promoter of the concert series. In 2011 and 2012, he bought, renovated and reopened the Capitol Theater in Port Chester, N.Y., reportedly one of Mr. Garcia’s favorite places to play. Since it reopened, each surviving member of the band has performed solo gigs there.

Working closely with the surviving members’ managers, Mr. Shapiro pulled together the idea for a final hurrah, pegged to the band’s 50th anniversary. There are deals to broadcast the concert on satellite radio, via pay-per-view and in movie theaters. “There is money being made,” Mr. Shapiro said, though he noted that unlike most other concerts or music tours, there are no official corporate sponsors.

“Everyone wants it to be like 1993, and we’re trying,” he said, “but it’s still 2015.”

A crafty seat-of-the-pants subculture has long surrounded Grateful Dead shows. People supported their music habits by selling grilled cheese sandwiches out of the backs of their vans in concert parking lots.

There were bubble shows, bongo solos, longhaired beauties breezing around carrying palettes of face paint. With the band’s permission, some fans recorded the concerts, exchanging their tapes in a robust barter economy. (For the Chicago shows, tickets to a special section behind the sound board were sold for the same purpose.)

For David Honig, 46, trying to get tickets through the mail-order system wasn’t just about getting tickets. It was about tapping back into rituals like this that defined his days at the University of Arizona, in Tucson, during which he saw about 80 shows. “Back then, my parents couldn’t text me or look for me on Facebook,” he said.

Now a husband, father of two and marketing entrepreneur, Mr. Honig can't wait to return, not just to the music, but to all the creativity that went with it.

He decorated his mail-order envelope with photographs of Dead shows past (back in the day, it was believed that to the best decorated envelopes went the spoils) and used his phone to record daily trips to his mailbox to see if his strategy worked; the resulting video is called "Waiting for a Miracle." Checking the mail, he said, "became the best part of my day."

Mr. Honig did score tickets and will stay at the J.W. Marriott, with his college friends bunking at the W hotel. "We used to see the Dead in Vegas, and we'd sleep 12 in a room at a motel," he said. "We're the same guys who were going when we didn't have money, but now we do. I don't know why being a Deadhead and loving the music means you have to be a hippie living on a commune."

Tony Dwyer, 64, an asset manager in Stuart, Fla., was not so lucky, though he is a devoted fan who saw the Dead at Woodstock in 1969, just after his freshman year at Saint Louis University. When he returned to school in the fall, he helped arrange to bring the Dead to town to play the Fox Theater.

"I got a lot of my fraternity brothers very high that night, and a large percentage of their lives were changed," he said. Mr. Dwyer, who named one of his companies Garcia Asset Management, went on to promote a handful of shows for the Dead.

He entered the mail-order sweepstakes in the hopes of winning tickets but did not succeed. "I wrote a letter back saying I was shocked and disappointed that someone who put that much effort into the band in the early days would be left out like this," he said, but never got a response. He added, "I think anyone who pays thousands of dollars for a ticket is out of their mind."

Mr. Shapiro, the promoter, who is also the closest thing the Dead have to a concert spokesman, said he is well aware of all the criticism about the planning and execution of the "Fare Thee Well" event. "This is very emotional for people," he said.

But Dean Sottile, 45, a chiropractor and father of two from Montville, N.J., who chronicles Dead culture on his blog, Grateful Dean, is staying mellow.

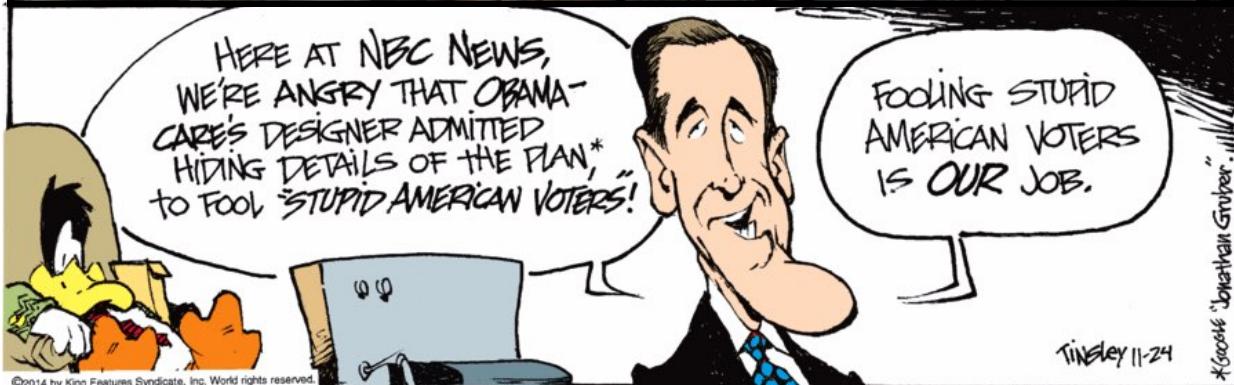

He has been surprised by the demand for concert tickets because the surviving players have been touring regularly as solo acts or as part of other groups for years. But he's not surprised by the hand-wringing and debates. "This is such an entitled fan base," said Mr. Sottile, who has seen about 350 Dead shows.

Sure, he longs for the days when he grabbed a backpack and $40 and took off for a summer of Dead shows. But he knows times are different. Through a company, he bought a "Steal Your Face" package, entitling him to tickets to the Chicago shows, a room at a Marriott and stadium perks like access to a buffet.

It cost about $2,600, not including airfare.^{*23}

Horrific Results of ‘Men Turning Away From God’

In 1570, Ivan the Terrible attacked Novgorod, which had been for centuries a successful Russian republic on the Baltic Sea. Ivan’s first command was to subjugate the church. He stripped cathedrals and monasteries of their valuables; put priests and deacons in shackles and flogged them til they paid a ransom; and he ordered some 500 clergymen beaten to death.

Ivan laid waste to 90 percent of the farmland surrounding Novgorod. Ivan’s 6,000 secret police, called Oprichniki, pillaged, burned, arrested and terrorized with cruel violence. Men, women and children were roasted over fires; tied to sleds and dragged through town; trapped under ice in the Volkhov River and if they managed to surface they were shoved back under. According to “The First Pskov Chronicle,” 60,000 people were senselessly slaughtered by Ivan the Terrible.

The French Revolution’s Reign of Terror, was led by Robespierre, head of the “Committee of Public Safety.” In a speech titled “The Terror Justified,” Robespierre told the National Assembly, Feb. 5, 1794: “Lead … the enemies of the people by terror. … Terror is nothing else than swift, severe, indomitable justice.”

Robespierre attacked Christianity and turned churches into Temples of Reason. The secular French French government beheaded 40,000 in Paris, then slaughtered 300,000 in the Vendee from 1793-1796.

During World War II, Nazi General Hans Frank executed a reign of terror in Poland, plundering and committing mass murder of millions of Poles and Jews in death camps. After the war, Hans Frank was arrested. During his imprisonment, Fr. O’Conner led him to believe in the atonement of Christ for his sins and he became a Roman Catholic.

At the Nuremberg Trials, Aug. 31, 1945, Hans Frank was convicted and executed. Being remorseful at his trial, Hans Frank stated: “At the beginning of our way we did not suspect that our turning away from God could have such disastrous deadly consequences and that we would necessarily become more and more deeply involved in guilt. At that time we could not have known that so much loyalty and willingness to sacrifice on the part of the German people could have been so badly directed by us. Thus, by turning away from God, we were overthrown and had to perish....”

Nazi leader Hans Frank continued: “Before all, God pronounced and executed judgment on Hitler and the system which we served with minds far from God. Therefore, may our people, too, be called back from the road on which Hitler—and we with him—have led them. I beg of our people not to continue in this direction, be it even a single step; because Hitler’s road was the way without God, the way of turning from Christ, and, in the last analysis, the way of political foolishness, the way of disaster, and the way of death. … His path became more and more that of a frightful adventurer without conscience or honesty, as I know today at the end of this trial. We call upon the German people … to return from this road which, according to the law and justice of God, had to lead us and our system into disaster and which will lead everyone into disaster who tries to walk on it … everywhere in the whole world.”

Another instance of government without God was during the Soviet era where millions were killed in purges. Stalin said: “Crisis alone permitted the authorities to demand—and obtain—total submission and all the necessary sacrifices from its citizens.”

President Franklin Roosevelt told the delegates of the American Youth Congress, Feb. 10, 1940: "The Soviet Union ... is run by a dictatorship as absolute as any other dictatorship in the world."

Stalin controlled citizens through "fear and food." The people were kept in constant fear that government agencies would falsely accuse them and cart them away in the night, and the people were kept in a continual shortage of food, so they could not have the resources to rebel. Stalin engineered a famine in his war against the kulaks that killed millions.

Richard Pipes commented on the absolute power of Russia's Josef Stalin in his book, "Communism—A History": "To break the resistance of the peasants in the Ukraine, the North Caucasus, and the Kazakhstan, Stalin inflicted on these areas in 1932-33 an artificial famine, shipping out all the food from entire districts and deploying the army to prevent the starving peasants from migrating in search of nourishment. It is estimated that between 6 and 7 million people perished in this man-made catastrophe."

... "Stalin's regime needed another crisis ... as Fidel Castro, the leader of Communist Cuba, would explain ... 'The revolution needs the enemy. ... The revolution needs for its development its antithesis.' ... And if enemies were lacking, they had to be fabricated."

... "In 1934, a prominent Bolshevik, Sergei Kirov, the party boss of Leningrad, was assassinated under mysterious conditions ... evidence points to Stalin. ... Kirov was gaining too much popularity in party ranks for Stalin's comfort. His assassination brought Stalin two advantages: it rid him of a potential rival and provided a rationale for instigating a vast campaign against alleged anti-Soviet conspirators. ... Purges of the 1930's were a terror campaign that in indiscriminate ferocity and number of victims had no parallel in world history. Authorities ... beat them until they confess to their crimes they have not committed."

In February 1945, Alexander Solzhenitsyn was arrested in the Soviet Union for writing politically incorrect comments against Joseph Stalin. He was imprisoned for eight years, as he described in his autobiographical lecture, printed in the Nobel Foundation's publication, Les Prix Nobel, 1971: "I was arrested on the grounds of what the censorship had found in my correspondence with a school friend, mainly because of certain disrespectful remarks..."

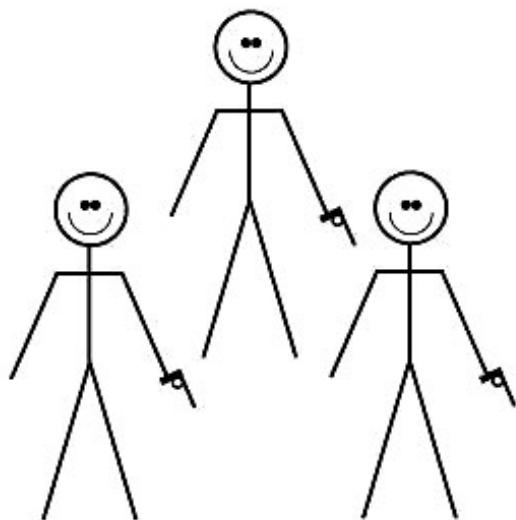

Alexander Solzhenitsyn described: "Over a half century ago, while I was still a child, I recall hearing a number of old people offer the following explanation for the great disasters that had befallen Russia: 'Men have forgotten God; that's why all this has happened.' Since then I have spent well-nigh 50 years working on the history of our revolution; in the process I have read hundreds of books, collected hundreds of personal testimonies. But if I were asked today to formulate as concisely as possible the main cause of the ruinous revolution that swallowed up some 60 million of our people, I could not put it more accurately than to repeat: 'Men have forgotten God; that's why all this has happened.'"

... Alexander Solzhenitsyn was awarded the Nobel Prize for literature in 1970, but the Communist government did not allow him to leave the country to accept it. Solzhenitsyn wrote "The Gulag Archipelago," which was translated into 35 languages and sold over 30 million copies. In response to international pressure, the Soviet Union expelled Solzhenitsyn on Feb. 13, 1974.

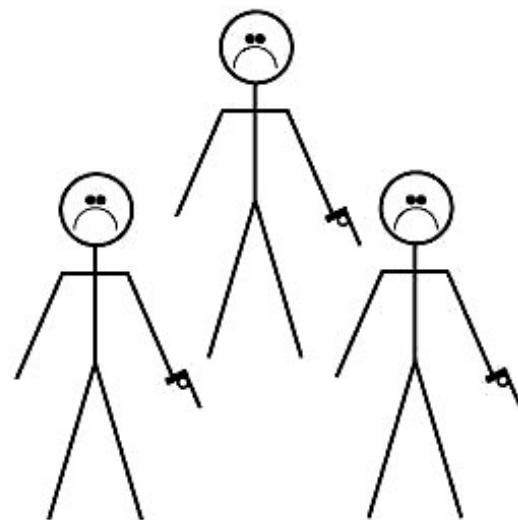

The following year in Washington, D.C., Alexander Solzhenitsyn warned: "I ... call upon America to be more careful ... because they are trying to weaken you ... to disarm your strong and magnificent country in the face of this fearful threat—one that has never been seen before in the history of the world." ^{*27}

Joining the Dots: Why the Establishment Hates Donald Trump

On the face of it, Trump is Reagan on steroids. His towering size, his nativist US supremacism, his down-home talk, and his reality-show confidence make him ideal for the role of bullying and big lies from the oval office.

He is America come to meet itself in larger-than-life image to rejuvenate it as its pride slips away in third-world conditions and a multi-polar world.

While Trump's narrative is that the American Dream seeks recovery again, the dominant media and political elite relentlessly denounce him as an implicit fascist and disastrous fake.

Something deeper is afoot. An untapped historic resentment is boiling up from underneath which has long been unspeakable on the political stage. Trump has mined it and proposed a concrete solution always denied of his candidacy. From his promise to halve the Pentagon's budget to getting the Congress off corporate-donation payrolls, the public money that the big corporate lobbies stand to lose from a Trump presidency are off the charts. But his attackers dare not recognize these explosive issues because they are all part of the problem.

The public money stakes may be bigger than the US corporate stakes behind the foreign wars the US state has initiated since 1991. The takeaway promised by Trump's policies threaten almost every big lobby now in control of US government purse strings. It grounds in the military-industrial complex spending close to $2,000,000,000 a day for its endless new untested weapons and foreign wars both of which Trump opposes. But the cut-off of hundreds of billions of public giveaways to the Big Corps do not end here. They hit almost every wide-mouthed transnational corporate siphon into the US Treasury, taxpayers' pockets and the working majority of America. Masses of American citizens increasingly without living wages and benefits and in increasing public squalor and insecurity are paying attention to what the political establishment and corporate media have long buried and continue to silence.

Trump has raised the great dispossession from impotence into the establishment's face, and this is why he is a contagion on the American political scene. He is pervasively mocked, accused and slandered in non-stop public fireworks of ad hominem hits, but the counter-attacks never engage what Trump has set his sights on—the long stripping of America by corporate globalization selecting for the limitless enrichment of the very rich living off an ever-growing take from public coffers and the impoverishment of America's working people. A primal rage unites the political establishment across party lines, but they can't say why. No defaming scorn and abuse is off limits, but Trump's underlying betrayal of the ruling game remains unspeakable on the stage.

The electoral dynamite of all the Americans who have lost all their good blue-collar jobs, social benefits and public infrastructures is recognized only in class condescension. But the facts cannot be denied of a corporate globalization effectively stripping the lower middle classes and the public realm itself with no-one in Washington establishment saying a word against the greatest transfer of wealth to the 1% in history.

Trump may deserve back as bad he gives. But this understanding keeps our eyes on the ego-contest which is the standard spectacle to avoid the real issues. The personal attacks only tells us how deep the rupture has become between Trump's campaign and the establishment on the issues kept out of sight. This is why the corporate politicians and media are almost as wound into one-way demonization of Trump as they are when they beat the drums of war against a designated Enemy abroad.

In the end, it may get to him—as when he tries to find angry millions again from onside with an evangelical trumpet of abortion-is-murder just before the primary in Wisconsin.

Trump is a shameless opportunist, no doubt. Yet we continue to revolve within an ad hominem circle until we go deeper than the establishment morality tale of the evil of the stigma object—the oldest propaganda trick in the book. The major money interests that are really at stake in the conflict between Trump and the political-economic establishment remain unconnected and blocked out. “Who will stop Trump” is not only now asked across America, but the world’s media in China too. But nothing is less talked about than the globally powerful interests he has promised to rein back from the public troughs bleeding the country’s capacities to build for and to employ its people. On this topic, there is only silence or abusive distortion frothing from the mouth.

Joining the Dots of the Great Silence

Eventually people may ask why the establishment unanimously abhors Trump across party divisions which are otherwise unbridgeable. Even if he is a caricature of American privilege and self-promotion, who else could fight the corrupt corporate-state and media establishment? Who else could ever get public support from dispossessed masses and from inside the Republican Party base itself? Who else could take on the supra-dominant corporate interests of the war state, drug monopoly, health insurance racket, lobby-run foreign policy, off-shore tax evasion, and global trade with only corporate rights to profit taking jobs in the tens of millions from home workers, and still hold a large and right-wing voter base onside?

Conversely, what else than Trump’s threat to the corporate-state establishment can explain the unity of voice and venom against an American paragon of wealth and chutzpah? What else could motivate a cross-party and corporate media hate campaign where there is nothing else in common across the condemning voices? Only those citizens depending on the deep system corruptions he promises to reverse are really threatened by Trump’s candidacy. But how do these huge private interests go on getting away with a corporate-lobby state transferring every more public wealth and control to them at the expense of the American majority and their common interest when most people already dislike and are systemically exploited by them? They get away with it by no-one being able to do anything about it.

Trump represents a threat to these gargantuan public-trough interests that even the super clean and informed Ralph Nader candidacy for president never did. The corporate media and party machines just shut him down on the electoral stage so few even knew he was a presidential candidate. You can’t do that with Trump. That is the very big problem for the otherwise seamless political and media establishment who are all in on the fabulous payoffs of this corporate state game. Trump’s entire strategy is based on getting public attention, and he is a master at it, unbuyably rich, and the most watched person in America across the country and the world. He can’t be shut up. Personal stigmatization and attack without let-up are the only way to gag his policies and turn the tide against him at the same time.

Maybe it will work in the end. It’s how disastrous and bankrupting foreign aggressions and wars have been sold whatever the ruinous costs to the public paying for them.

Until Wisconsin

When you join the dots to Trump also preaching a policy revolt against the insatiable corporate jaws feeding on trillions of dollars of public budgets in Washington, the meaning becomes clear. But that connected meaning is blacked out. In its place, the corporate media and politicians present an egomaniac blowhard bordering on fascism who preaches hate, racism and sexism. But the silenced policies he advocates are more like jumping into a crocodile pit. He is on record saying he will cut the Pentagon's budget "by 50%". No winning politician has ever dared to take on the military-industrial complex, with even Eisenhower only naming it in his parting speech. Trump also says that the US "must be neutral, an honest broker" on the Israeli-Palestine conflict—as unspeakable as it gets in US politics. Big Pharma is also called out with "$400 billion to be saved by government negotiation of prices". The even more powerful HMO's are confronted by the possibility of a "one-payer system", the devil incarnate in America's corporate-welfare state.

Trump even challenges "the Enemy" cornerstone of US ideology when he says "wouldn't it be nice to get along with Russia and China for a change?" Not very fascist of him. He was also open to nationalizing the Wall Street banks after 2008. None of this sees the light of day in the hate-Trump culture that been effectively mounted across even left-right divisions. Most of all, Trump rejects the whole misnamed "free trade" global system because it has "hollowed out the lives of American workers" with rights to corporations to move anywhere to get cheaper labour and import back into the US tariff-free. But again the connected meaning is repressed. That Trump also wants to get the US out of foreign wars at the same time, the other great pillar of corporate globalization, is the real danger to the transnational corporate state he has set in motion.

All these policies threaten only the ruling money interests of America that depend on the superpower public purse to extend their transnational monopolies and multiply their wealth. This is the real establishment interest that has so far evaded the glare of publicity and critique of the Donald Trump phenomenon, bigger now with Bernie Sanders than any political challenge to the US system since the 1960's. Trump is certainly not a working-class hero. He is a pure capitalist, with all the furies of private interest and greed that capitalism selects for. But at this time he is a capitalist who is not rich from looting the public purse as the biggest annual cash flow, nor from exporting the costs of labor and taxes to foreign jurisdictions with subhuman standards that come back to the US as "necessary to compete". Trump has initiated a long overdue recognition of parasite capitalism eating out the life capacities of the US itself.^{*29}
